PETROLEUM.

Public Attention

Is Again Requested

To the Successful Adaptation

of

Crude Petroleum

to the

Useful Fuel

and the Production of Motive Power.

NEW AND HIGHLY IMPORTANT RESULTS ACHIEVED SINCE OUR LAST ANNOUNCEMENT, IMPROVEMENTS IN CONSTRUCTION AND COMBUSTION, INCREASE IN ECONOMY AND POWER. THE INVENTORS AND OWNERS OF THE NEW PROCESS FOR CONVERTING CRUDE PETROLEUM TO THE USES OF FUEL, take pleasure in saying that since their first public announcement of Dec. 13, 1869, they have continued their exertions to complete and improve their invention, until its operation is but a Complete, Thorough and Practical Success.

The daily operation of the process now covers a period of four months, during which time not a single serious obstacle has been developed, but, on the contrary,

VERY IMPORTANT AND SUBSTANTIAL IMPROVEMENTS

HAVE BEEN SUGGESTED AND EFFECTED.

The most gratifying result, perhaps, which we can make known to practical men is the fact that we continue to overcome, in the completest manner, the chief of all obstacles which has heretofore estopped the progress of all inventions having for their object the utilization of petroleum, viz.:

CARBONIZATION.

This chemical difficulty, which has crippled all previous efforts, has never even made itself apparent in our process, and we have now been in successful and daily operation since the 1st of October, 1869. There has never been the slightest deposit of carbon in the solid state.

The Principal Improvement

which we have made is to combine the generator and receiver in one machine, instead of two, as heretofore. This economizes space, renders it far more compact and more readily adapts it to all practical purposes. We have also

of the apparatus by increasing its capacity for generating the vapor, and we have greatly

IMPROVED THE COMBUSTION

by regulating the application of the HYDROGEN (or super-heated steam) in its fusion with the carbon, as it is forced into the fire box, where it is consumed.

WE AGAIN CALL ATTENTION

TO THE QUESTION OF

ECONOMY.

It is freely conceded by every one that if all the heating properties of coal could be utilized there would be no need to seek another source of fuel supply for the sake of economy. The same assertion is entirely true in regard to Petroleum. The difficulty has been to so treat this material that its total power could be practically applied. This object we claim to have achieved, and we say, with much satisfaction, that our comparative tests thus far, though not complete, and made under many mechanical inconveniences, nevertheless demonstrate that the Economy is Fully Fifty Per Cent.

AS COMPARED WITH COAL.

We beg further to call attention to a few of the practical uses and primary industries to which this process is conceded to be eminently adapted. We name first,

The Manufacture of Pig Iron.

While Congress is angrily discussing the question of reducing the tariff on iron from $9 to $7 per ton, this process is gradually but surely providing the means whereby the manufacturer will not only cease to deplore the loss of his protection, but will be placed in a position whereby he can defy foreign competition. Not only will he be enabled to make iron cheaper, but he will make iron better, because in substituting this fuel for coal, he will thus add much more power of production, but he will get rid of the deleterious sulphurous combinations which so largely impregnate nearly all grades of American pig iron. In addition to this interest, we may mention the extensive work of in the machine shops, foundries, factories and forges of the country. The greatest item of expenditure in all these industrial pursuits is the COST OF FUEL, chiefly incurred in bringing the raw material of iron to that condition where the mould, the trip hammer, and the anvil shape it for the uses of mankind. We know that if even ten per cent. can be saved in this direction on the present expenditure for coal, this new agent of Crude Petroleum will detrone the Anthracite King.

AS TO OTHER PRACTICAL USES,

such as propelling

STATIONARY ENGINES,

AND ITS ADAPTABILITY TO LOCOMOTIVE AND STEAMBOAT BOILERS, we simply reiterate our previous announcement, to wit: that it is simply a matter of mechanical detail. Our everyday illustration for the past few months fully establishes all question as to the matter of stationary engines.

We Have Been Favored

with many hundred inquiries with regard to our process and its results, which it has been impossible to answer, simply for want of time. We have also been favored with many hundred visitors, including practical men from all parts of the country, who have witnessed the practical operation of this invention. We have asked for no expression of opinion, but have left every one to form their own judgment of what they saw. We believe all have been favorably impressed. If not, they will probably say so. From the great number of visitors who have witnessed the apparatus in operation, we select a few names, not as references, but simply for the purpose of showing the character of the attention and the interest which this invention has excited:

NET RESULTS.

We have briefly recapitulated some of the leading results which we claim to have achieved and demonstrated upon practical operation thus far:

1. Absence of Carbonization.
2. Great Economy in Fuel.
3. Perfect Combustion.
4. Uniformity of Heat.
5. Safety and Facility in Application.
6. Absence of Sulphurous Deposits, and Consequent Saving in Fire Boxes, Grates and Flues.
7. Saving of Weight and Fuel Space.
8. Absence of Smoke, Ashes and Cinders.

We have now under construction ten new machines—one for Philadelphia, one for New-York, and the remainder for other cities and different manufacturing purposes. We shall be able to present to the citizens of New-York, in a short time, our new process in FULL PRACTICAL OPERATION, of which due notice will be given. In the meantime our address is as below.

WASHINGTON.

The September Letter of the President to Mr. Boutwell.

An Important New Tariff Movement.

Legislation to Enforce the Fifteenth Amendment.

THE MARCH SALES OF GOLD.

Arguments in the Postal Telegraph Scheme.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—During the revelations which followed the September gold panic, much reference was made to a letter addressed by the President to Secretary BOUTWELL and left with General BUTTERFIELD to be delivered to the Secretary on his return from Massachusetts to Washington, about the middle of September. That letter was alleged to have been an indorsement of the Gould-Corbin theory of high gold. The letter itself is the best proof of its character, and is as follows:

NEW-YORK CITY, Sept. 12, 1869.

Hon. George S. Boutwell, Secretary of the Treasury:

DEAR SIR: I leave here to-morrow morning for Western Pennsylvania, and will not reach Washington before the middle or last of next week. Had I known before making my arrangements for starting that you would be in this City early this week, I would have remained to meet you. I am satisfied that on your arrival you will be met by the bulls and bears of Wall-street, and probably by merchants, too, to induce you to sell gold or pay the November interest in advance on the one side, and to hold fast on the other. The fact is, a desperate struggle is now making, and each party want the Government to help them out. I write this letter to advise you of what I think you may expect, to put you on your guard. I think, from the lights before me, I would move on without change until the present struggle is over. If you want to write me this week, my address will be Washington, Penn. I would like to hear your experience with the factions, at all events, if they give you time to write. No doubt you will have a better chance to judge than I, for I have avoided general discussion of the subject. Yours truly,

U. S. GRANT.

THE TARIFF.

An important movement on the tariff will be made in the House to-morrow. Mr. ALLISON, of Iowa, will offer a resolution declaring dissatisfaction with the proposed bill, and asking for a revised tariff in the interest of the producers and consumers, and consistent with the legitimate requirements of the revenue. It is also proposed, at a subsequent period, to present a substitute for the Tariff bill now before the House.

THE GEORGIA LEGISLATURE.

The Judiciary Committee of the Senate have substantially agreed upon the report which they propose to make on the organization of the present Legislature of the State of Georgia. The principal features are understood to be these: The Committee agree that there were several irregularities in the organization of the Legislature, consisting of the appointment of the man HARRIS to preside at the outset; the recesses ordered by General TERRY; the Board of Inquiry who investigated the question of ineligibility, and the seating of the persons having the next highest number of votes, which, though it had a Democratic precedent, is found to be alike unauthorized, either by the laws of Georgia, or the laws of the United States. The Committee will, nevertheless, report that, in their opinion, no further legislation is either wise or necessary, and will recommend that the present status of the State Government be accepted and an end put to the troubles of Georgia. There is a general disposition among both parties in the State to accept the results as they now stand. The Democrats acquiesce because they fear a worse result for them in case of new legislation. The question of Senators is not included in this decision. That will come up in the consideration of the question whether the Georgia Legislature, at the time HILL and MILLER were elected, was a legal and competent body. The strongest Republican lawyers in both Houses hold that as the illegal act of the Legislature was not committed until after these Senators were elected, their election was therefore perfectly legal. In the House Judge BINGHAM holds that it is entirely unnecessary to pass a second act of admission, the Fortieth Congress having declared that the State was entitled to representation.

ENFORCING THE FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT.

Mr. SUMNER will introduce to-morrow a bill to enforce the provision of the Constitution included in the Fifteenth Amendment. The bill provides that any person who, under any pretence of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, willfully hinders, or attempts to hinder, any citizen of the United States from being registered, or from voting, or from being voted for, or from holding office, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or more than $3,000, or by imprisonment in the common jail for not less that thirty days nor more than one year. Suitable provisions are made for carrying out this act by the United States Courts and officers, and to institute proceedings at the expense of the United States against any person who may violate it.

THE CENSUS SUPERINTENDENT.

A malicious and unfounded report has been set afloat by an interested party to the effect that there is much hostility in Congress against General FRANCIS A. WALKER, the new Superintendent of Census. This is not true. There is no such hostility; on the contrary, the members of the House Census Committee almost unanimously agree that General WALKER is by far the fittest man for the position of any of the experts who came before them during their investigation. Besides, under the present law, the appointment rests with the Secretary of the Interior, and Congress has nothing to do with it. The promoter of these attacks is a disappointed aspirant whose name and checkered political career will have to be made public if the warfare is continued.

NEW FRACTIONAL CURRENCY.

Models for the new fifty cent notes have been completed. The size is the same as the old ones. A vignette of the late Hon. E. M. STANTON, pronounced a most excellent likeness, and executed by one of the best engravers in the United States, will ornament the left end of the note. The other end for the space of an inch will remain blank, for the purpose of showing the localised silk fibre, which will be so introduced as to make it a distinctive feature of the note. It will be remembered this paper is only manufactured by the Government, and that orders have been recently issued by Secretary BOUTWELL forbidding the bringing of any paper of this description from abroad. Having failed to prevent counterfeiting by engraving, it is believed the plan adopted will be the best safeguard; at least it increases the difficulty of producing imitations. The President expressed himself as very much pleased with the adoption of the vignette of STANTON, and complimented the engraver on the excellence of the likeness of one whom he esteemed so highly.

MR. BUTLER AND HIS FRIENDS.

Everybody is laughing over the serenade fiasco of BUTLER last evening. It was a most ludicrous failure. A few soldiers and sailors who are expecting prize money at BUTLER'S hands in the New-Orleans suits now pending here, and a score of political hangers on who want office, first met and defended BUTLER'S action in the Whittemore case, and then marched up to tender him a serenade. When he came out he couldn't see the extent of the crowd, owing to the darkness and began a complimentary speech, but when he discovered that his indorsers consisted of only forty-nine persons, mostly of color, he cut short his remarks and disappeared.

THE SEASON OF GAIETY.

Saturday evening was quite noted for the brilliancy of its social entertainments, which are now winding up the gay season rapidly. Secretary and Mrs. BELKNAP gave their closing card reception, which was largely attended by a distinguished company. Mrs. BELKNAP has become a universal favorite in society here this Winter, and by her youth and charming freshness of manner has added much to the enjoyment of the season. At Highland Place, the residence of THOS. B. BRYAN, Esq., a soirée dansante was given, which in all its appointments was one of the most superb affairs of the Winter. A suite of parlors seventy feet in length were given up to dancing and promenading. The company here was also very distinguished, the President and his daughter NELLIE being amongst the guests. Mrs. BRYAN not only received with stately grace, but enforced a most sensible innovation in early hours, her guests being invited for 6 o'clock, and 10 being designated as the hour for departure. The refined and elegant character of this entertainment, given as it was by one of the wealthiest residents of this city, was greatly heightened by the utter absence of all wines and spirituous liquors.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

THE GOLD SALES FOR MARCH.

The Secretary of the Treasury has directed the Assistant Treasurer at New-York to continue the sales of $1,000,000 of gold and the purchase of $1,000,000 of bonds on alternate weeks during the month of March, on account of the sinking fund, or a sale of $2,000,000 of gold in all. Also to purchase $1,000,000 of bonds on each alternate week for the special fund.

THE GOLD PANIC.

The Committee of Banking and Currency hold another meeting to-morrow to consider the report concerning the gold panic already prepared by General GARFIELD, their Chairman.

TRIAL OF A PAYMASTER.

Major E. H. BROOKS, Paymaster, has been ordered to proceed to Austin, Texas, to testify before a Court for the trial of Major ISAAC STEWART, Paymaster, and will take with him all the documentary evidence pertaining to the case.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Argument of Mr. Orton Continued—Further Comparisons of Europe and America—Representative Hubbard's Reply.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—At the special session of the Senate Committee on Post Offices yesterday morning, Mr. ORTON continued his argument against the Hubbard scheme as follows:

Whatever differences of opinion have existed concerning the policy of the Government in that regard, the fact will be conceded that during the past forty years the protection of American labor against the competition of the cheaper labor of Europe has been a prominent item in the creeds of all political parties. There have been disagreements concerning the extent to which the principle should be carried, but no party has yet had the temerity to ignore it altogether. It has appeared to me, therefore, especially unjust in the service like the telegraph, more than half the cost of performing which is paid for labor, should be demanded of private corporations in the United States at the same rates as it is afforded in the most densely-populated countries of Europe. The Government, where there is a Government, may build and operate the telegraph, whether for public convenience or an element of power, have no privileges to pay for, have no stockholders expecting dividends, and are satisfied when the Budget can be so manipulated as to exhibit only a trifling loss. If the demand which is now being made, that the price of telegraphing in this country shall be graduated to the lowest European standard, is a reasonable one, what shall be said to that larger class who demand cheaper food, and clothing, and rents and fuel. These are necessary for all, while the telegraph is essential only to the few, and the latter are abundantly able to pay the rates now charged. If it is around duty to so legislate as to enhance the price of the necessaries of life, what valid reason can be assigned on the other hand for forcing down the rate of wages for another class of labor? Ours has never been considered a paternal Government. A people competent to govern themselves are certainly able to provide every requisite for promoting social and commercial intercourse, and for the development of the resources of their country. Some European Governments have gone much further than the telegraph in making provision for their subjects. There are Government baths, with the accessories of Government soap and towels; and in France the Government builds opera houses and provides balls and entertainments, with soldiers in uniform present to preserve order. The Imperial autocrat, who is held upon the throne by the bayonets of his soldiery while women's fabrics are manufactured along the highways, can well afford to offer cheap telegraphy to his subjects in return for the greater privileges which he has wrested from them.

CONSOLIDATING COMPETITION.

Mr. ORTON then proceeded to discuss the report of the Committee, reading that portion which speaks of consolidating competing companies as something to be desired, and also the removal of competition:

He suggested that inasmuch as the only charge made against his Company was that of being a great monopoly, whether it was the policy of Congress to foster consolidation and abolish competition, when the result would inevitably be the establishment of a greater monopoly than now existed. He stated that competing lines were now in operation in a majority of the States, all of which were being extended, and that if the business was not interfered with by Congress it was probable that in a short time, a year or two at the furthest, competition in telegraphy would exist all over the country. Competition rarely promotes the interest of shareholders, but so long as the latter are ready to invest capital in such enterprises, the public will certainly not complain, and the Government has no occasion to interfere. He called attention to the reference in the report of some statement made by the Chairman of the Select Committee on the "Postal Telegraph" in the House, and added that that is a Committee recently appointed at the request of a member of the House, which has not yet organized, and the opinions of its Chairman, therefore, are entitled to no more weight by this Committee than those of any other gentleman who has not had the opportunity to investigate the subject. But, if it was worth while to quote and make a part of your report the casual remark of the Chairman of the new Committee in the House, why has the fact been ignored that the House Committee on Post Offices, which had this subject under consideration for two years, and has heard more arguments concerning it than even the Senate Committee—why, I say, has no mention been made of the fact that the House Committee, near the close of the last session, unanimously ordered a report adversely, not only to the Hubbard scheme, but to two or three others which had been referred to it? That report was duly published, and is one of the documents of the House; and neither the conclusions of the Committee nor the reasons therefor have ever been controverted.

COST OF LINES.

Speaking of the cost of lines, he said, cost is rarely the measure of value, although it may properly be taken into account as an aid in ascertaining it. If the Government proposes to purchase a property and business, say in the City of New-York, would the question be asked what did it cost? And, on the other hand, if it should be decided to remove the capital to the Mississippi Valley, and this building was put up for sale as an aid in the untold millions which it has cost he considered the measure of its value? Any discussion of the cost of telegraph lines in this country, at this time, by a Congressional Committee, seems improper in view of the fact that, by the terms of the law of 1866, whenever the Government shall decide to purchase the telegraph, the companies have the right to select half the jury; and until it is proposed to purchase, there is no occasion to consider either cost or value here. He then called attention to the error of the Committee's report in regard to the charge for messages from Washington to the following places: Waltham, Mass., given at $1 75, is but $1 20; Chicago, given at $1 75, is but $1; Geneva, Ill., given at $3, is but $1 80; Omaha, given at $3 75, is but $2 55; Jackson, Miss., given at $3 25, is but $2 25.

PRIORITY OF TRANSMISSION.

He then called attention to certain provisions of the bill not previously referred to, and of the clause authorizing priority of transmission at special rates not named, and said if, after due consideration by Congress and with a full understanding of the subject, it is decided to authorize this feature in telegraph service, the inducement would be so strong that I should be almost tempted to urge the passage of this bill, in order that my Company might avail of its provisions and get control of its organization; for if you will give me the right by law to make my own rate for messages requiring immediate dispatch, I care little what the rate shall be for the small remainder which will consent to be delayed.

REPLY OF MR. HUBBARD.

The following is a synopsis of Mr. HUBBARD'S argument in reply to Mr. ORTON:

Mr. HUBBARD began by stating that it was true the telegraph was principally used at the present time by bankers, brokers, speculators and the Press. The object of the Postal Telegraph was to bring it within the reach of the many, and make it an ordinary means of communication. There are, he said, two systems of telegraph—the governmental and the corporate systems. The former is in operation in all the countries of Europe; the latter in America alone. A comparison of the two systems disclosed the following results: The investment for 390,000 miles of wire in Europe is $41,000,000 in gold, or $48,000,000 in currency, at the present prices, while the Western Union Telegraph Company have 104,000 miles of wire, with an investment of nearly $48,000,000. Four miles of wire under the Government system would cost no more than one under the corporate system. In nineteen countries in Europe 25,000,000 messages are sent for $13,000,000 in currency, while the Western Union Telegraph Company transmits 8,000,000 of messages for $5,700,000. The average rates under the Governmental system are forty-five cents; under the corporate system seventy-one cents. The argument of Mr. ORTON that the rates per mile are less in this country than in Europe is fallacious, because distance does not enter into the cost of telegraphing, for on a good line it costs no more to send a message fifty miles than it costs a thousand miles. The telegraph is less used in America than in England, France, Belgium, Switzerland and the Netherlands; and in all the southern and western parts of this country it is probably less used than in other parts of the United States. Mr. ORTON says the business cannot be done at the great reduction of rates proposed by the Postal Telegraph Company. The average reduction on rates, it is believed would be about fifty per cent. The experience of Europe shows that while the rates are reduced fifty per cent. there the business is increased one hundred per cent, with an increase of expenses from twenty to thirty per cent. In Switzerland the rate on the 1st of January, 1868, were reduced from one franc to half a franc. The business as a consequence doubled, and the net receipts were reduced only three thousand francs that year. When the rates are low the pay for the increase of length of messages nearly pays for the increased rate. In America if a union of the telegraph to the Post Office be made there will be a large reduction in all the office expenses of the telegraph without any corresponding increase in the expenses of the Post Office Department. These office expenses are at least twenty-five per cent. of the present expenses of the telegraph. If, then, the rates are reduced fifty per cent., and business is increased one hundred per cent., with twenty-five per cent. additional expense, these additional expenses will be saved by the union with the Post Office Department. The wires are now occupied but a small portion of the time. Low rates will induce new classes of business which do not now use the wires to use them at times of the day when they are not crowded with business. Only ten per cent. of the business is now on social matters—the same proportion that Belgium had at the high rates. At low rates fifty-nine per cent. of the Belgium business is on social matters; and from the habits and character of our people, it is natural to suppose a like result will follow like causes. The ordinary mercantile correspondence is now generally written in the afternoon and transmitted by the night mails. When the telegraph shall be made an ordinary means of communication, with reduced night rates this mercantile correspondence will be transmitted by telegraph. If the proposed rates, 25 cents for a message transmitted a thousand miles at night, are not low enough to induce merchants to use the wires, the rates must be reduced until business is increased. Great reduction in the expenses will be effected by the removal of competition. It had been said as an objection to the bill that $250 a mile was too much to be paid for many of the lines, and that they could be purchased at very much less value and turned into the Postal Telegraph Company at a large profit. To this it may be replied that the corporators are gentlemen representing the various telegraph interests, who will see that other companies are not favored to their prejudice; and besides, every contract must be made subject to the approval of the Postmaster-General, and therefore no great or improper profit can be made without his assent and approval of the transaction. At the end of five years, he will be a purchaser of the property at the end of five years, he will be careful to see he does not sanction or give too large a sum for any lines of telegraph. Mr. HUBBARD said they had been told that Mr. ORTON'S policy would be decided by his observation of the working of the English system. That system works favorably, and yet the gentleman opposes the bill. The only reason for this can be that he expects the English system will be a success, and through his friends will ask the Government in another year to adopt the English system, with the English rule of damages, which, according to his report, will give to his Company $56,000,000 instead of $25,000,000—the amount proposed to be paid under the Postal bill. He therefore favors the bill of General WASHBURN introduced at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. ORTON interrupted, saying he did not favor that bill, but that if either system was to be adopted he preferred that of the postal telegraph, as being better adapted to this country than the English system.

Mr. HUBBARD, resuming, said that Mr. ORTON, in his remarks on the English system, gave his reasons why he believed although it might succeed there it would not succeed here. There, the operators are selected and promoted on account of merit and pensioned when old age overtakes them. Here, if the Government system be adopted, the operators and employes would be chosen for political considerations, not simply on account of merit in their department of business. The postal telegraph system, on the other hand, proposes to adopt the present telegraph lines with their officers, operators, and employes, because they can perform their business better than any others. For the office business they will employ the post offices of the country. The system does not propose to incorporate any new department or any new bureau of the Government, but merely to adapt itself to the existing arrangement of the Post Office Department. It is believed the Post Office Department has the right, and should avail itself of the last discoveries of the means of transmitting the correspondence of the people, and that the people have the right to have their correspondence transmitted by the slow mail or by the lightning mail as they may elect. Letters and telegrams will each be received by the same clerk in the Post Office, each transmitted under contract, one by railroad and the other by telegraph, to the office of its destination to be delivered through the instrumentality of the Post Office.

The discussion occupied about two hours, and was listened to with great apparent interest by the members of the Committee and several gentlemen who were in attendance.

The Difficulty Between the Manufacturers and Iron Moulders of Troy.

From the Albany Journal, Feb. 26.

The difficulty between the stove manufacturers and moulders of Troy continues. A meeting of the manufacturers was held on the 8th inst., at which all the manufacturers in the city were represented, with one exception. At this meeting it was stated that the cost of moulding in Troy was ten per cent. higher than in Albany, Buffalo, or in fact any of the leading stove marts, and a resolution was passed looking either to a reduction of the wages in that city, or else an increase in other cities, so that Troy could maintain its position in the stove trade. A committee to confer with the Moulder's Union was appointed. The Union resolved by a unanimous vote not to reduce wages, but resolved to secure an increase in other cities, so that the stove trade in Troy should not suffer in the least. The conference here ended. No demands were made on either side, but the matter was left in the hands of the Moulder's Union.

The New Constitution for Tennessee.

From the Nashville Union, Feb. 25.

That the proposed Constitution is in some respects objectionable, we will not controvert, but it has this redeeming feature—it extends the franchise to the white people of the State. To those of us who are deprived of the right of suffrage the importance of the success of the new Constitution is intensified. If the proposed Constitution is defeated we shall have to continue under the old Constitution with the Radical amendments of February, 1865.

MADRID, Feb. 26.—The struggle between the Church and the Revolutionary parties is becoming more itensified. The debate on the proposition to prosecute the Archbishop of Santiago for treason threatens to consume the entire session of the Convention....The Duke of MONTPENSIER, in reply to repeated newspaper articles, demanding a definition of his position, to-day publishes a letter in one of the leading journals, wherein he says he has not been, and is not now, a pretender to the throne; that in all things he will follow the will of the Cortes; that he is in no way compromised to any political party; that he is satisfied to be a Spanish citizen, and that he longs for a definite Constitution for Spain....There have been some Carlist disturbances recently at Carcelen, near Albacete, but they were suppressed in all cases by the civil guards.

LOPEZ

His Latest Manœuvre—Evacuation of Pasadero—An Effort to Cut Off His Retreat.

LISBON, Feb. 26.—The regular mail steamship from Rio de Janeiro arrived here at a late hour yesterday. The news from the seat of war is quite important. General LOPEZ had been forced to evacuate Pasadero, abandoning his sick and wounded. He moved towards Benecora. At the last accounts the Count D'EU was moving across the Alpa River in the hope of intercepting LOPEZ'S retreat.

TENNESSEE.

A Card from Senator Brownlow—He Favors a Military Government for the State.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Feb. 27.—Senator BROWNLOW publishes a card in this morning's Whig, saying: "I am in favor of setting aside the present State Government of Tennessee, and the doings of the State Convention, and the present Legislature, and of the appointment of a Military Governor, backed up by national troops, which will put a stop to the wholesale murder of white and colored Unionists. That Congress will do this I have no sort of doubt." His card occasions some excitement. He predicts the party fraudulently usurping the State Government will get sick of rejecting the Fifteenth Amendment, removing the present patriotic Judiciary and other wicked legislation.

THE PACIFIC COAST.

Respect to the Memory of Mr. Burlingame—Petition for the Fenian Prisoners.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 27.—The flags on all the public buildings in this city and the shipping in the harbor are flying at half-mast, in respect to the memory of the late ANSON BURLINGAME....The grand musical festival of CAMILLA URSO closed yesterday. The gross receipts are estimated at $50,000....Several prominent Irishmen of this city propose the getting up of a monster petition to the Government of the United States, with reference to the cruel treatment of the Irish political prisoners now confined in English prisons, which was lately made public by the English and Irish Press, and asking the Government to appoint a commissioner to visit the different prisons and ascertain the real facts relative to their treatment. The petition will be signed by the whole Irish population here, and forwarded to Senator CASSERLY for presentation to the President.

Political Matters—The New-Hampshire Campaign—Terrorism in South Carolina.

CONCORD, N. H., Feb. 27.—Hon. HENRY L. DAWES, of Massachusetts, addressed a political meeting at Nashua last evening. Among other speakers stumping the State for the Republicans are Senators Nye, Patterson and Sawyer, Hon. Thomas Fitch, of Nevada, General O. H. Van Wyck and Representatives Cragin and Ela. Great interest is felt in the result of the election.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Feb. 27.—The South Carolina Legislative Committee, composed of Democrats and Republicans, appointed at the last session of the Legislature, to investigate the disordered state of affairs in the Third Congressional District, have reported that there was a thoroughly organized party in the district, whose purpose was to defeat the real objects of the Reconstruction acts, and that this party had murdered, whipped, threatened and intimidated Republicans. The Democratic portion of the Committee are preparing a minority report, asserting that the majority report is highly colored.

THE DISASTER IN MISSISSIPPI.

The Scene of the Accident—Twenty-One Persons Known to be Dead—Horrible Mutilations.

OXFORD, Miss., Feb. 26.—A fearful accident occurred about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon to the regular morning train on the Mississippi Central Railroad for New-Orleans. The train, leaving Humboldt behind time, approached Buckner's Trestle, which is forty feet high and over a ravine, at a high speed. The engine crossed safely, but the rest of the train ran off the track, crushing the trestle and completely wrecking the baggage, mail, express and three passenger cars. The cause of the accident is believed to have been the unsound condition of the trestle timbers, which permitted the rail to slip out of place and thus switch off the cars, which crashed through the trestle and plunged into the ditch. Every car was utterly demolished. The baggage, mail and express freight broke loose, and was scattered on the sides of the ravine into which the train plunged. The first and second passenger cars were shattered to pieces. The remaining passenger car kept its place on the track, while its forward end rested on the wreck of the second car in the ravine at an inclination of fifty degrees. Two women, four children, twelve white and three colored persons, are known to have been killed, and, it is feared, some others. Among the killed was Colonel SPEERS, a planter, residing fourteen miles from Jackson, who was returning from Chicago with thirty laborers; also Mr. S. C. MOORHOUSE, of Elkhart, Ind.; Mrs. DUNCAN K. FARRELL, who had just arrived from Scotland, via New-York, and J. MCDONALD, Supervisor of the southern end of the road. The names of the others could not be ascertained, but they are believed all to have been from the West and South. Among the injured was Miss AGGY ELLIOTT, of New-York, who was fastened an hour in the wreck by the side of five men, who were killed; but she was rescued without apparent injury, except a badly crushed hand. Colonel SAM. TATE, President of the road, was nearly suffocated by a pile of passengers thrown upon him in the wreck; but he is now comfortable. One man's leg was badly broken, another's knee was crushed; many were cut and bruised, and three or four are suffering from severe internal injuries. A special train from Louisville was only half an hour behind the wrecked train, with a large party of Northern and Western railroad men, accompanied by ladies, and a few passengers, including JOHN E. RUSSELL and wife, Mr. J. W. SIMONTON, General Agent of the Associated Press, and his wife, of New-York, and Mr. GORREN, of New-Orleans. The party are all safe, and assisted in succoring the victims of the wreck. The wounded were chiefly brought to Oxford, where the citizens proffer every assistance possible. Mr. H. C. MCCARTY, of Pulaski, N. Y., mail agent of the train, was slightly hurt, but declined medical aid. The southward bound passengers will proceed to-day.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Feb. 26.—A special dispatch to the Ledger, from Oxford, Miss., says seventeen persons were killed by the railroad accident; among whom were Colonel SPEARS, of Brandon, Miss., Mr. MCDONALD, road master, two ladies and two children, names unknown. The remainder of the killed, with few exceptions, were emigrants en route to Texas. Fourteen or fifteen passengers were wounded, several fatally. Mr. MCDONALD'S body was horribly mangled and hardly recognizable. The train, with the exception of the engine, is a complete wreck. RICHARD BUSTRED, son of WM. H. BUSTRED, of New-York, is also among the injured.

Sinking of the Schooner Benjamin Butler on the New-England Coast—The Captain and Three of the Crew Lost.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Feb. 26.—The schooner Benjamin Butler, Captain FOWLER, from Elizabethport, N. J., for Providence, was run down and sunk off Watch Hill, at 1 A. M. Friday. The vessel was cut in two and went down instantly. Four men were lost—Captain FOWLER, JOSEPH NORTHRUP, JAMES MCKENZIE and the colored cook named AMOS MALBONE. The mate, GEORGE NORTHRUP, was picked up by the steamer Thetis, after being in the water half an hour, and was not restored to consciousness for several hours. The lost men, except the cook, belonged in Wickford, in this State. The wind was blowing a gale at the time of the disaster. It is thought the schooner's lights were obstructed by ice. Her cargo of coal belonged to MANCHESTER, HOPKINS & Co., of this city, and, with the vessel, was uninsured.

Bold Robbery in Worcester—Suicide of a New-Yorker in Boston.

WORCESTER, Mass., Feb. 27.—A bold robbery was perpetrated in this city yesterday afternoon. Two men entered the house of TIMOTHY BARRETT when all the family but a boy 13 years of age were absent, knocked down the boy and tied him with a clothes line. The robbers then searched the drawers and trunks, but the absent members of the family had the money they wanted. They carried off gold watches, gold chains, jewelry, silver and other articles of value. They have not yet been arrested.

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 27.—P. J. O'CONNOR, 26 years of age, took a mixture of strychnine and beer last night, and was taken to the City Hospital in a hopeless condition. A neatly-written note was found upon him, of which the following is an extract: "Whoever finds my corpse will please telegraph to P. P. MCHUGH, No. 51 Ann-street, New-York, and will give it decent burial. I am tired of life. Rum is the cause of all evil."

Movements of General Quesada.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Feb. 27.—General QUESADA and staff, of the Cuban army, passed through this city on Saturday from Florida. The General is in excellent health, and is very cheerful in regard to the cause. He represents the Cuban army at twenty thousand men, but says they are in need of arms. He says they will succeed whether aided or not.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

BALTIMORE, Md., Feb. 27.—Right Rev. THOS. FOLEY was to-day consecrated Bishop of Pergamus and Bishop-Coadjuctor of Chicago, Ill. There were present Bishop MCCLUSKY, of Louisville, Ky., consecrating Bishop, and Bishop ROSECRANS, of Ohio, and Bishop BECKER, of Wilmington, Del. The latter preached the sermon from the last three verses of the Gospel of Matthew. The ceremonies were of a most imposing character, over two hundred priests taking part. An immense audience filled the Cathedral.

DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 27.—The trial of GEO. VANDERPOOL, at Manistee, Mich., for the murder of HERBERT FIELD, was concluded on Saturday. The jury rendered a verdict of murder in the first degree. Upon being asked why sentence should not be pronounced the prisoner spoke for ten minutes, calling God to witness his innocence of the crime. He was sentenced to solitary confinement for life.

MILWAUKEE, Feb. 27.—

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE ODES AND EPODES OF HORACE. A METRICAL TRANSLATION INTO ENGLISH, WITH INTRODUCTION AND COMMENTARIES. By Lord LYTTON. With Latin Text from the Editions of ORELLI, MACLEANE and YONGE. New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS. 1870.

Lord LYTTON'S elegant and scholarly version of HORACE will be welcomed with pleasure by all lovers of the Venusian, even though it bring the inevitable disappointment which each successive attempt to translate the untranslateable only renews. HORACE is never quite himself in the most deftly fitted alien garb; yet the very difficulty which is the constant incitement to his translators, is at once their best justification and the chief whet of their readers. Just because in the poet's manner lies so much of his peculiar charm, which it is so hard to reproduce, there is unlimited scope for ingenuity and fertility of rendering. We come to each new version not expecting to be wholly satisfied—not, perhaps, even desiring it—for to admit that possibility would be to dishonor our poet; but curious to see how familiar obstacles have been overcome and familiar beauties transfigured. We rejoice to find that the new adventurer has succeeded where others have failed; his failures even may suggest the success he has barely missed, while an apt or novel version of an epithet often lends to a passage a grace unsuspected before. Lord LYTTON has had his share of success and failure; and the apportionment of both in the minds of most of his critics will turn, we fancy, on their judgment of his unrhymed metres. To us he seems, in his entire rejection of rhyme, to have deliberately added to the difficulty of reproducing the artistic beauty of the odes, without attaining any compensating increase of fidelity to their language or spirit. To give in English even a tolerably adequate notion of HORACE'S unrivaled form asks for all the mechanical resources and embellishments of our verse. Especially is this true of the lighter odes, whose effect comes chiefly from the art of their construction, and whose evanescent grace and airy loveliness elude the grasp of Lord LYTTON'S rhymeless measures. Comparison, of course, is not criticism, but comparison of the results achieved by Lord LYTTON'S method and that of the rhyming translators may serve to show our meaning. Of the latter, Mr. THEODORE MARTIN seems to us in many respects the fairest example, and his version combines poetry with fidelity to a higher degree than any others we have seen. Let the reader set Mr. MARTIN'S version of almost any of the lighter odes side by side with Lord LYTTON'S, and the inferiority of the latter, in vernacularizing the foreign poet, in domesticating him as it were—and this after all is the true aim of translation—will be, we are very sure, quickly apparent. Space fails us to give more than one or two examples. Ode I., 13, "Ad Lydiam," has in the original more of the spirit and style of a modern love song than any other classic poem we remember outside of Catullus, and breathes, indeed, a passionate tenderness and regret more akin to the Veronese than the Venusian. The second stanza of the Latin:

"Tum nec mens mihi nec color
Certa sede manent; humor et in genas
Furtim labitur, arguens
Quam lentis penitus macerer ignibus," is thus rendered by Lord LYTTON:

"Then in my mind thought has no settled base;
To and fro shifts upon my cheek the color,
And tears that glide adown in stealth reveal
By what slow fires mine inmost self consumeth."

Mr. MARTIN puts it:

"Then reels my brain, then on my cheek
The shifting color comes and goes,
And tears that flow unbidden, speak
The torture of my inward throes,
The fierce unrest, the deathless flame,
That slowly macerates my frame."

Excepting the question as to the propriety of using in a translation from the Latin so purely Latin and unidiomatic a word as macerates, Mr. MARTIN'S rendering seems to us to have caught the lyrical flavor of the original as thoroughly as Lord LYTTON has missed it. Of the greater felicity of his wording there can be no two opinions in the minds of Horatian scholars; and it would be hard to find in translation a neater substitution of of idioms than exhibited in the two first lines of the stanza quoted. The last stanza of the same ode:

"Felices ter et amplius,
Quos irrupta tenet copula, nec malis
Divulsus querimoniis
Suprema citius solvet amor die, lovely as it is, Mr. MARTIN transfuses into something very like English poetry:

"O trebly blest, and blest forever,
Are they whom true affection binds;
In whom no doubts or janglings sever
The union of their constant minds;
But life in blended current flows
Serene and sunny to the close!"

Beside this, does not Lord LYTTON'S version, though a trifle more literal, seem cumbrous and cold?

"Thrice happy, ay, more than thrice happy, they Whom one soft bond unbroken binds together;
Whose love, serene from bickering and reproach,
In life's last moment finds the first that severs."

Ode I., 25, again, to Lydia—another Lydia, let us hope, with Lord LYTTON—is even more difficult, for the poet here indulges in certain licenses of invective which modern taste eschews. Mr. MARTIN'S success is here more marked—Lord LYTTON'S failure more positive. Two stanzas the latter omits altogether; the remaining three he gives us shorn of all their lightsome grace:

"More rarely now shake thy closed windows
With quick knocks of petulant gallants,—
They break not thy sleep; to thy threshold
Fondly the door clings,

Once turning so glib on its hinges.
Thou hear'st less and less, 'Lydia, sleepest thou?
'Tis I—all night long for thee dying—
I, thine own lover!"

* * * * * *

Now thou whin'st that this new generation
Likes but young shoots of ivy and myrtle,
And dedicates dry leaves to Hebrus,
Writer's cold comrade?"

Of the metre it may be remarked that he has elsewhere surpassed it. For this mutilated and limping version, Mr. MARTIN gives us an entire poem, bright, sparkling, without one offensive suggestion, yet conveying in the main the sense of the Latin:

"Swans in numbers
Break your slumbers,
Saucy Lydia now but seldom,
Ay, though at your easement nightly,
Tapping loudly, tapping lightly,
By the dozen once ye held them.

Ever turning
Night and morning,
Swung your door upon its hinges;
Now from dawn till evening's closing,
Lone and desolate reposing,
Not a soul its rest infringes.

Serenaders,
Sweet invaders,
Scanter grow, and daily scanter,
Singing, 'Lydia, art thou sleeping?
Lonely watch thy love is keeping!
Wake, O wake, thou dear enchanter.'

Torn and faded,
You, as they did
Woo and in your turn are slighted;
Worn and torn by passion's fret,
You, the pitiless coquette,
Waste by fires yourself have lighted.

Late relenting,
Left lamenting—
Withered leaves strew wintry brooks!
Ivy garlands greenly darkling,
Myrtles brown with dewdrops sparkling,
Best preserve youth's glowing looks."

With the exception of the last stanza—which, like the youthful Lydia, though pretty, is a little freer than we could wish—this translation seems to us exceedingly good. Especially praiseworthy is the ingenuity by which the coarseness of the third and fourth stanzas of the Latin is eluded by extending the translation to manners as well as to words. And for this evasion, more than once needful in translating the odes, rhyme is, if not an indispensable, at least a very useful aid. This and many similar odes—I., 22, "Ad Chloen," for instance, which, however, Lord LYTTON renders better than most; I., 5, "Ad Pyrrham," which he does not attempt at all, substituting instead MILTON'S unrhymed, and, if it be not heresy unpardonable, we may add overrated version; II., 7, "Ad Barinen," which Lord LYTTON does so clumsily as to obscure the sense, asking us to accept as a fair equivalent for the graceful badinage of the second stanza, such prose as this:

"But in proportion as that head perfidious
Thou doom'st to Orcus, brighter shines thy beauty,
And grows still more the universal theme of Youthful adorers."

III., 9, the well-known "Carmen Amabœum," of which the version is only less awkward than the last; and, generally speaking, all the erotic odes are better rendered with rhyme than without.

In the graver odes Lord LYTTON is more fortunate. I., 24, "Parcus deorum;" III., 16, "Inclusam Danaën;" IV., 2, "Pindarum quisquis;" IV., 4, "Qualem ministrum," and the charming pastoral epode, 2., "Beatum Ille," so admirably paraphrased by DRYDEN, strikes us as among the best. But in these, as in all, there is constantly recurring a fault already alluded to as a serious one in English translation—the reproduction of foreign idioms. In translation, if anywhere, should we look for idiomatic English. Such expressions, therefore, as "well becomes anointed brows," "pious, alas! in vain, I.," 24, (where the word "pious," if used in a purely Latin sense, does not express the meaning of the Latin;) "but me more have stricken with rapture;" "lest thou owe a mock;" "ease is not venal;" II., 16; which is, besides, entirely superfluous, "closed gates of Janus, vacant of a war," offend a severe taste. Often, too, there is an inaptness in rendering epithets, which we should scarcely expect from so complete a master of style. "Bosom more seen through than glass," hardly seems the neatest possible translation of "perlucidior vitro." "Dewy banks," IV., 2, gives no very graphic picture of "uvidi Tiburis;" and "rough" is a most commonplace version of "hispidos," in II., 9. Yet, sometimes, it is fair to add, the author does justice to his original's curious felicity.

"Worshiper rare and niggard of the gods,
While led astray, in the Fool's wisdom versed," is a very satisfactory translation of

"Parcus deorum cultor et infrequens,
Insanientis dum sapientiæ
Consultus erro;"

and "face so ambiguously fair" cleverly avoids the difficulty in "ambigua voltu," II., 5. Many awkward inversions occur, as in II., 2:

"Him shall uplift, and on no waxen pinion, Fame, the survivor,"

where the sense is only vaguely given; and elisions, as immediately after in the same ode, the verse,

"Wider thy realm, a greedy soul subjected,"

which would be scarcely intelligible without the Latin. Again the force of the Latin is often unnecessarily diluted, as in I., 28, where the words "calcanda semel" are extended into six English ones, and not completely rendered then. "Trodden by all and only trodden once," only by shadowy implication suggests the idea of necessity so prominent in the Latin. "The spots on earth most stricken by the lightning, Are its high places," is surely a weak substitute for "feriuntque summos fulgura montes," and the words, II., 8, "obtain thee blessings Only when broken," not only have no equivalent in the original, but rather help to mystify the meaning they are intended to clear. This sort of redundance is the more faulty, since terseness and fidelity are among the chief advantages claimed by the upholders of unrhymed measures. In the omission of objectionable passages a degree of propriety is shown which borders on prudery.

These are some of the exceptions which, we fancy, most Horatians will take to Lord LYTTON'S work. But, all faults considered, they will still find it, as we began by saying, an elegant and scholarly version of the poet whom they all delight to honor. Not the least of its attractions is in the introductory essay reprinted from Blackwood, and the descriptive and critical notes attached to each ode. These show research, a conscientious study of authorities, and the graceful erudition for which Lord LYTTON has long been renowned. The text is printed to face the translation, and except for a few errors in proof, as on page 387, where the word "recepto" is docked of its final syllable, quite handsomely printed.

PERSONAL AND MILITARY HISTORY OF PHILIP KEARNY, MAJOR-GENERAL UNITED STATES VOLUNTEERS. By JOHN WATTS DE PEYSTER. New-York: RICE & GAGE.

This biography is full of spirit and interest. Taken as a literary production, it is rather the rudis indigestaque moles, the heaped-up, unsorted raw material of history, than a piece of deft, compact workmanship. Taken as a portraiture of KEARNY, it is tinged with the family pride which the author (a cousin) most pardonably displays. However, it is only with enthusiasm that his countrymen can speak of KEARNY, and the fire and aggressiveness of the biography are well suited to the subject. Fully two hundred pages are taken up with KEARNY'S history before the war of the rebellion; and this preliminary part, by reason of its elaborate genealogical and family detail, its wild stories of adventure in Italy, Algiers and America, and its record of PHIL. KEARNY'S Mexican, African and Indian campaigning is specially interesting. "The bravest man," said SCOTT, "I ever knew, and the most perfect soldier,"—surely of such a man so detailed a biography will be prized by his myriad admirers. Three hundred pages more give us PHIL. KEARNY'S services in the rebellion—his life as a Union soldier, so prematurely and lamentably ended. The only previous sketches of KEARNY worth mentioning are the one prepared by General DE PEYSTER for our columns in 1861, of which the present volume is an amplification, and Mr. CORTLANDT PARKER'S excellent biographical essay on KEARNY. The author enriches and illustrates his subject from a very wide range of military reading, with apposite and picturesque citations. He is free, also, with his criticisms and laudations of prominent American Generals, which, though in some cases we may not accept, in all cases we must respect. With more artistic and professional skill this biography might have become a lasting literary work; as it is, it is a notably lively and entertaining one.

ASKAROS KASSIS, THE COPT. A ROMANCE OF MODERN EGYPT. By EDWIN DE LEON, late United States Consul-General for Egypt. Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO.

Mr. DE LEON was for many years in Egypt as the representative of our Government, and enjoyed unusual opportunities for seeing the interior life of the Orient. He speaks truly, when he says, that "two things color the whole woof and web of Eastern society, the fatalism of Islam, which permeates and blends with every act of its daily life,—and the isolation of the Harem, which establishes the social position of woman," and these influences can be understood and appreciated by one who has had long and intimate acquaintance with the Oriental. This book, while possessing all the characteristics of a romance, is yet a vivid reproduction of Eastern life and manners. No one who has sojourned for weeks in Cairo and spent months upon the dreamy Nile can fail to recognise the truthful and almost photographic pictures which Mr. DE LEON has drawn in the progress of his tale. The story is told for the sake of the scenery of Eastern life, which is skillfully drawn around it, and though by no means wanting in dramatic action, and able delineation of character, this is not to us the chief feature of the book. A New-York Merchant; His Maiden Sister from Boston; The Merchant's Son and Daughter; An English Lord; A Syrian, and Askaros Kassis, the Copt, are the chief characters, around whom the interest centres. The Copt and the New-York girl are the lovers of the tale, and they are admirably portrayed. But as we have already said, the book is to be regarded more as a view given the reader by one who has been behind the scenes of Eastern life, and so correct is this view that the very atmosphere—so to speak—of the volume reminds us of the land of the lotus and the palm, and awakens longings for a return to those skies which are never darkened by clouds, and that land where life partakes of the tranquillity of Bramah in the blissful Nirvana.

REPTILES AND BIRDS; A popular account of their various orders, with a description of the habits and economy of the most interesting. By LOUIS FIGUIER, author of "The World Before the Deluge," &c. Illustrated with 307 wood cuts. Edited and adapted by PARKER GILMORE. ("Ubique.") New-York: D. APPLETON & CO. 1870.

Of all organized creatures the reptile and the bird seem to us most unlike, not only in themselves, but in the feelings which they inspire. The one crawls on the earth, the other flies in the air. The one charms, the other repels us. While we are fascinated by the one and wish to cherish it, the other alarms, and we strive to destroy it. Yet dissimilar as they are in look and influence on ourselves, these creatures bear to each other a strong internal resemblance—a resemblance that in the minds of naturalists, M. FIGUIER being of the number, justifies their being brought together in most attempts at a classification of the Animal Kingdom. Thus, HUXLEY says that, structurally, "reptiles and birds do really agree much more closely than birds with mammals, or reptiles with amphibians." Such, briefly, is the reason for the present odd-looking juxtaposition. The result is certainly a highly entertaining and edifying volume. There is enough of the popular element in M. FIGUIER'S work to interest throughout the non-scientific reader, and enough of the scientific to shield its pages from the charge of merely conveying amusement. Mr. GILMORE'S share in the version before us must have cost him great labor, but we do not see that he has cause to regret bestowing it. Whether he is entirely responsible for some rather queer looking renderings of French idioms we know not, since his name only appears as Editor and Adapter. In these latter capacities he has earned solid praise. The book is packed full of interest, and has many graces of style to enhance its other attractions.

CONVERSATIONS ON LIBERALISM AND THE CHURCH. By O. A. BROWNSON, LL. D. New-York: D. & J. SADLIER & CO.

Dr. BROWNSON is well known for the vigorous and trenchant style with which he treats the topics which engage his pen, and the present work forms no exception to his general rule. In a popular manner, calculated to engage and retain attention, he deals with the objections to the Roman Catholic Church which are urged by the champions of Liberalism and of progress, and asserts the extreme ultramontane views of Roman Catholics as indisputable truths. It will somewhat startle the reader who doubts that infallibility dwells in the Pope, and that all spiritual good is confined to the Roman Church, to learn from Dr. BROWNSON, that "except in the material order due in great measure to the previous discovery by Catholics of this western hemisphere, and in the further extension and practical application of certain great principles always insisted on by the Church, there has been no real progress in civilization since the epoch of the Reformation." And it is a feature of society which has certainly never struck us, although not without personal knowledge of British and continental countries, that the Roman Catholic poor and peasantry were free from that debasing servility to rank and wealth which degrades their Protestant fellow men "even in democratic America." Our observation is diametrically opposed to such a conclusion, and common sense teaches that just in proportion as any one surrenders his right of private judgment, and follows blindly any leaders in politics, religion or social life, does he become servile and dependent. The book does not accord with American tastes and modes of thought, but it deals with questions of the hour, which are raised by the Ecumenical Council, the declaration of infallibility by the Pope, and the recent attitude of Father HYACINTHE in France, and will, therefore, be read with great interest.

A SYSTEM OF INSTRUCTION IN QUANTITATIVE CHEMICAL ANALYSIS. By Dr. C. REMIGIUS FRESENIUS, Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy, Wiesbaden. From the last English and German editions. Edited by SAMUEL W. JOHNSON, M. A., Professor of Analytical and Agricultural Chemistry in the Sheffield Scientific School, Yale College. New-York: JOHN WILEY & SON. 1870.

Compressed and in some respects altered, with a view to adapt it to the needs of American students, this book is substantially a translation of the well-known work of one of the most eminent German scientists. The volume before us, although of considerable size, is smaller than either the original or the English version, a result that has been obtained by omitting some sections altogether, and by paring down others into more manageable dimensions. Among the former is Dr. FRESENIUS' Analysis of Mineral Waters, a chapter deemed unnecessary, and among the latter the section on Organic Analysis which has been reduced from sixty to thirty pages. Besides this, other parts have been wholly left out, including—most important to agriculturists—all that relates to Soils and Ashes of Plants. The editor thinks the recent appearance of Prof. CALDWELL'S treatise on Agricultural Chemical Analysis, a sufficient reason for the latter omission. The book, however, contains matter not in the original. The additions include a translation of BUNSEN'S new methods of treating precipitates, and several new modes of estimation and separation. For a volume necessarily so crowded with formulas, the work seems to us remarkably free from errors, although it would be hardly less than miraculous if there were not some. The translation has been thoroughly and accurately done, and the editor's scientific attainments have been well employed in supervising so important an addition to our scientific literature. Adaptations that involve omissions from and additions to the original are hazardous things. But in this case so much taste and knowledge have been shown, and the reasons for alteration are so apparent, as to leave room only for approval. The work is almost invaluable as a text book, and will be indispensable to the scientific shelves of libraries and schools.

PRINCIPLES OF A RECONCILIATION OF PHILOSOPHY in accordance with which it is endeavored to reconcile the most difficult questions of metaphysics and religion with reason, and with the sciences and common life. By CHARLES ELDRIDGE. New-York: CARLETON & LANAHAN.

The principles upon which the "reconciliation," referred to in the title of this book, is sought, are that God is not supreme arbiter and force in the universe, but that there are certain original forces, laws which always existed, and which do not depend upon God for their existence, which could not have been different, and cannot be changed. Of course God is considered as subordinate to these forces, that is, he must act in accordance with them. It results also from these "principles" that only certain things are possible, and these possibilities embrace the species, or the ideas, or the types according to which all things that exist or may exist must be. It will be seen at a glance that upon such a basis all difficult questions in metaphysics and religion may be readily solved, for the short answer to any enigma in theology, or difficulty in metaphysics would be, "what must be must;" "necessity knows no law" except its own; or some similar aphorism. But the main objection to the system is, that few will accept the basis, and hence their metaphysical and theological doubts and perplexities cannot be removed by its deductions. The work is ingeniously written, and the appendices are peculiarly interesting, but as a contribution to philosophy it is of little value.

LE MONITEUR DE LA MODE. Edition Française-Americaine. Paris: AD. GOUBAUD ET FILS. New-York: M. S. ZICKEL.

The importance of fashion can scarcely be over-looked by any one living in this dress-loving City, and the value of fashion books must, consequently, be proportionate. Of these, we have at least two, the results of native effort, that are very good, but they must always labor under a certain disadvantage in point of time while competing with their French rival. He is on the field, and born a ruler, by virtue of his nationality; while they, following in his footsteps, can only repeat those commands which he brings from the land. There the voice of the dressmaker might claim the compliment here so freely bestowed on the vox populi. The plates in the present number of Le Moniteur are well executed, and the figures bear a resemblance to humanity quite surprising in such a work to see.

—The March Harper's is a number of average merit—which means more in this case than it does in many others. "Pussy" will be ecstatically devoured among the children, and "Frederick the Great" has hero-worshipers upon whom the somewhat extended account of him here given will never pall. "Nature's Common Carrier" is tolerably extensive in range, beginning as it does with the circulation of the blood and ending with the Delta of the Nile. The "South Coast Saunterings in England" are pleasant and trustworthy reading. "Civil Service Reform" is a rather heavy and academical plea for what is inevitable in good time, and "Our Relations with England" contains nothing new to speak of. The fiction of this number is not quite so good as usual, and the poetry is rather better. The Easy Chair gives what seems to us rather warmly-tinted eulogies of "Ours" at Wallack's—not that "Ours" does not deserve praise, and plenty of it, but because other plays have been quite as well done at that theatre, and so marked a discrimination in its favor seems a little unreasonable. However, the Easy Chair admits that it never visited Wallack's before, so that its enthusiasm is pardonable. We observe that Mr. LAWRENCE, or "Guy Livingstone," whichever he prefers to be called, has failed to furnish the promised copy for the first instalment of his new novel, "Anteros," and that consequently the beginning of that story goes over until the April number.

—The Leonard Scott reprint of the London Quarterly is just out with a very interesting table of contents that includes the following titles: "Mr. Tennyson's Holy Grail," "Life Insurance Companies," "Mr. Lecky's History of European Morals," "The Land Question in France," "Era of George the Second," "New-Zealand and our Colonial Empire," "Papal Intallibility," "Miss Austen and Miss Mitford," "The Byron Mystery—Mrs. Stowe's Vindication," and "The Irish Cauldron."

The Coming Boat Race Between the St. John-Paris Crew and the Renforth-Tyne Crew.

From the Toronto Leader, Feb. 26.

It has been known in boating circles for some time past that a crew composed of four of the most celebrated oarsmen in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, England, had accepted the challenge given to the world by the St. John crew.

The Lachine Boating Club, ever on the alert, at once made most liberal propositions to the two crews, providing that the race was rowed on their course: and, after considerable negotiation, Mr. WALLIS, the Secretary of the Club, received a cable dispatch on Thursday evening last announcing the welcome news that the English crew had accepted the proposition of the "Blue Noses," and that the race was finally fixed for the month of July. Terms as follows: six miles, straight away—in four-oared shells—for £1,000 sterling—the Lachine Club paying a portion of the traveling expenses, &c. Articles of agreement are on the way out for the signatures of the Paris crew.

This will be the greatest race ever rowed on this continent. Some St. John men are already well known, having visited Ontario last Summer as guests of the Toronto Rowing Club. The Tyne boys are also known to almost every one as the most powerful in England, composed as they are of four men averaging 12 stone 2 pounds per nape, in the Old World. What they may do alongside of the Canadians remains to be seen, but we have every reason to think that they will meet their match on this occasion.

We understand that the Toronto Rowing Club are endeavoring to make arrangements for the two crews to row on our bay at their annual regatta, which will come off about the same time as the Lachine race. We feel satisfied that the public will liberally support the club in this movement.

THE CENTRAL WEST—A NEW ERA.

Census—Railroads Advancing—The Pennsylvania—The Baltimore—The Chesapeake and Ohio—The Iron Development—The Advance of Manufactures.

THE BERCERS, Wednesday, Feb. 23, 1870.

In a former letter to the TIMES I gave my reasons for believing that the census of 1870 would show that the population and prosperity of the United States had recovered their usual rate of growth, and the effects of the war be entirely passed away. The 41,000,000, probably 42,000,000 of people—it is not the number of deaths from war, or any other cause, which diminishes population, but it is the reduced number of births. Now, it has been discovered that in the exhaustion of war, or epidemics, the rate of births is increased. There is no reason to believe that the loss of 500,000 men by the war will much decrease our population. Add to this a period of uncommonly good health, and add to this again an immense immigration, and you will see that there is not to be any great decrease in the growth of population. So, I say, that the census of 1870 will show nearly, if not quite, 42,000,000. And this reminds me of some New-York paper talking of the "village of Covington," Ky. How about the village of Jersey City or Brooklyn? The finest suspension bridge in the world goes from Cincinnati to Covington; and the villages of Newport and Covington probably contain 40,000 people. The fact is, the Central West is commencing a new era of development. Another suspension bridge is complete at Louisville, and another one is building at Cincinnati to make one link in the grand line of the Pennsylvania Road to the Southwest. Your New-York Central, probably, don't need any connection with Cincinnati. It thinks so. But I assure you that Mr. EDGAR A. THOMPSON, of Philadelphia, and Mr. GARRETT of Baltimore, are of a different opinion. They are turning the immense resources of these Companies towards making direct communications with the Southwest through Cincinnati. The Baltimore Road has already three branch lines through Ohio; one by the Central Ohio from Wheeling; one by Marietta to Columbus, and the main line to Cincinnati. The Pennsylvania Road has also three of great magnitude; one by Pittsburg to Fort Wayne, intersecting the Cincinnati and Toledo Road; a second by the Pan Handle route to Columbus, and west through Indianapolis on one hand, and to Cincinnati on the other, and the third direct to Cincinnati, (the Pennsylvania Road having just leased the Little Miami,) and across the river to the Southwest. Parties interested in the Pennsylvania Road are building the suspension bridge over the Ohio at Newport. The short line just made to Louisville is on a direct line from Cincinnati to Memphis. You see, then, that the Pennsylvania Road will have the most direct and best trunk line from the eastern Atlantic to the Southwest, which can be made. So much for the Pennsylvania and Baltimore Roads. I mention these things to show the New-Yorkers who talk about our "villages," some things they seem unacquainted with. But in point of fact, while every morning and evening newspaper talks about "dull times," there is in fact, beginning in the Central West, a more vigorous expansion of material prosperity than has been known in twenty years. In the first place there is this railroad revival, which extends through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky. The Legislature of Kentucky has just been here to see whether the villages on the banks of the Ohio ought to have a railroad, which Cincinnati proposes to make for them, at a cost of $10,000,000. Probably they will pass a charter of the "Southern Road," but whether they do or not a branch line from here to the South will be made; and the fever of railroading is upon all parts of the States, and Kentucky will soon put herself on a level with her sister States. Railroads are making in various parts of Indiana, and geological researches show that the southwestern part of this State is full of the most valuable materials for manufacturing—coal, iron and timber of the best qualities. In Ohio several new railroads are proposed, and no less than three to connect with the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad. We understand here that some of the best known capitalists of New-York and Richmond are interested in that work; that it is to be finished at an early day. Now, this is one of the most important works which can be made for the Central West, for it opens up the whole Southeastern Atlantic to the produce of the Ohio Valley. No sooner does Cincinnati begin to see the work will be made, than there is great interest felt there and in the neighboring counties in the connection to be made with it; for, of course, a strict connection with the "Chesapeake and Ohio" Road is a necessity to Cincinnati. So now, there are local controversies between three different routes to connect Cincinnati with the great Chesapeake line. This, of course. But you perceive that all this argues a new era of material improvement and new routes to the Atlantic. In the meantime manufactures are rising up in the West with great rapidity and vigor. The Textile Exhibition at Cincinnati, last Summer, quite astonished the natives as to their own industry. The finest cassimeres, shawls, carpets, cottons, &c., were exhibited from the factories in their own neighborhood. The great interior is fast emancipating itself from dependence upon Eastern or European fabrics. The whole relations of interior commerce are changing—and they will be wise who note it in time. This brings me to the theories and propositions of Mr. WELLS. He wants to take four dollars per ton off from the tariff on iron, in order to save somebody fifty cents on a stove. Now just let me tell you how this is to operate. Within a few years the new deposits of the finest iron and of the best coal to manufacture it have been found, opened and worked in the Mahoning or Shenango Valley, in Mahoning and Trumbull Counties, Ohio. In the same period immense exports of iron, amounting to 700,000 tons a year, are got out on Lake Superior. At the same time new furnaces have been erected in Southern Ohio and Eastern Kentucky. The same thing has taken place in Western Indiana. The result of all this is the erection of a great number of new furnaces and the employment of great numbers of people, and a vast capital, which otherwise would not have been so employed. Experience proves that the present tariff is about enough to give spirit and activity to the iron interest. Competition grows upon all hands. As for "monopolies," there are no monopolies in the country but those of copyrights and patent rights. Capital has been flowing into the iron business for two reasons—because of discoveries of new and better ores and coals, and because for once the tariff is high enough on raw iron to make it in most cases a productive business. The iron of Lake Superior is brought down to Cleveland, and even to the interior of Indiana, and there smelted and manufactured. In Southern Ohio new furnaces are erecting. Now this is a development of industry. This is what the country needs; this is the way to give employment to the tens of thousands of loafers and criminals who crowd the streets of cities, and are now taxing the City of New-York more than the whole tax on the people of your City by the tariff. New-York City pays twenty or thirty million of dollars a year, two-thirds of which are totally unnecessary, if the whole people were industrious game than duck or quail do battle with him in his favorite haunts.

White and gray geese are found in all the bay counties, on the lakes and up the rivers, in abundance. Duck are shot in the same localities, of which the most valued is the mallard, which remains and breeds in the country.

Then come the redhead spritail pigeon; wood duck, blue and green-winged teal; broadbill, spoonbill, sawbill, whistler, butter-ball, fantail, or Dutchman and Cadwell's. Quail abound in the surrounding counties, the season beginning on the 15th of September and ending on the 15th of March. In the immediate neighborhood of the city quail are scarce, being trapped and slaughtered for the market so earnestly that here they are now almost exterminated. Rabbits are also found in the quail grounds. The English or jack snipe are shot in the fresh-water marshes on the San Joaquin and Sacramento Rivers, in the Amador, Gilroy and Santa Clara Valleys. Of the bay snipe there is an abundant variety, such as curlew, willet white wings, plover, yellow legs, robin, doe-witch, ring-neck sand piper.

The grouse, one of the finest game birds, frequents Mendocino and the upper counties of the State. Several attempts have been made to stock the lower counties with these birds, but with little success. Trout abound in all the rivers running into the bay, and are taken with both bait and fly, but principally the former.

Such are some of the sporting grounds of California, but if we wish our game to increase, and our streams to abound in trout, the laws must be observed, the birds not killed out of season, the rivers not poisoned, and every infringement of these rules punished with severity.

Hon. LARKIN D. MASON, long a leading and earnest temperance man in New-Hampshire, has published a letter giving the reasons why he remains in the Republican Party in preference to uniting with the new Temperance Party in that State.

By hard labor an industrious resident of Alexandria, Va., had earned enough to enable him to lay aside $3,400. A designing woman recently ascertained the fact, married him, and in a short time decamped, taking the $3,400 with her, and leaving him wifeless and penniless. Have men no rights which women are bound to respect?

The Legislature of Alabama postponed to the next session the decision of the question of annexing Western Florida to that State. Florida's Legislature had already adjourned until 1871, and its action—essential to the completion of the proposed transfer—cannot be had before that time; and, besides, there is not unanimity in Alabama upon the value of the acquisition.

A Democratic paper in Texas promises Governor DAVIS that if he will boldly oppose himself to the herd of speculative vultures who are now congregated at Austin, and will honestly protect the State against the bills of plunder that unprincipled lobbymen are now preparing to "wine and liquor" through the Legislature, it will be "among the first to write his eulogy."

One of the depositors in the Boylston Bank, Boston, committed suicide last Friday, having been made insane by the loss of a large sum by the robbery of that bank. Meanwhile, the other losers and the detectives are as ready as ever to "compromise" with the burglars, but do not offer sufficient inducements to make it worth their while. Why not arrest the thieves for a variety?

Winter dies to-day. He has been a warm friend to the poor, but unless, lingering, he shall chill the lap of May, we very much fear the thirsty will look back upon him reproachfully, next July, and despairingly cry: "Come back to us, O, ye lost months of Winter, and bring with ye icebergs from Alaska, that there with the cool cobbler may be concocted and the cream congealed."

The Wheeling (West Va.) Intelligencer urges that Commissioners be appointed at once to meet the Commissioners of Virginia to discuss the amount of the debt of the latter for which the former State is liable; and it says that, whatever is to be done when West Virginia's share of the debt has been ascertained, the State cannot, without risking some suspicion of bad faith, decline to respond now to the action of Virginia.

Men who think that "women never reason" should read this little sentence from the Revolution: "If any woman perchance has thought so little upon this great question, (woman's suffrage,) as to be still under the old conservative idea that she 'does not wish to vote,' then most certainly she will not vote on this matter at all, for if she votes that she does not want to vote, she will herself contradict herself most notably." There now!

The circumstances of the decision in St. Louis last week, in relation to a prize fight, are thus stated: JOHN WILLIAMS made a bet of $1,000 with THOMAS PENDERGAST that TOM ALLEN would whip CHARLEY GALLAGHER. The parties put up $30 in the hands of TOM KEHOE and MIKE MCCOOLE, as a forfeit, and were to put up the balance at some future time. The stake was not put up, and the fight did not take place. WILLIAMS did not come forward with the stamps, and KEHOE gave the $30 forfeit to PENDERGAST. WILLIAMS sued KEHOE and MCCOOLE for his $30. Judge EMERY decided that PENDERGAST was entitled to the $30, as it was put up, and he bet, but a forfeit.

It is doubtful if a case can be made out against the Connecticut editor who swindled young men who replied to his "matrimonial" advertisements and sent him Post Office money orders. It is contended that, to make it forgery, the person whose name was forged must be produced; but "Alice Crosby" is a myth, and cannot be brought out; and to convict him of obtaining money under false pretences, the man swindled must appear, which he is not likely to consent to do.

Hon. ASA EASTWOOD, one of the pioneers of Onondaga County, died at his residence in Cicero on Friday last, having reached his eighty-ninth year on the Sunday previous. He was born in New-Jersey, and for a time resided in this City, but for fifty-four years he had been a citizen of Cicero. He was a member of the Convention of 1821, which framed the second Constitution of this State, and subsequently served on the Assembly, besides occupying various local offices of trust and responsibility.

DAVID and CHRISTIANA MOORE, of North Hammond, St. Lawrence County, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding day on the 23d inst. All their family of sixteen children are still living within seven miles from the old homestead, and all went home to pass the happy day of the golden wedding. Together they visited a photograph gallery, and the pictures of the father, mother and sixteen children were taken in a single group. And now New-York State claims the championship of the world.

PETER PHILLIPS, the murderer under sentence of death in Henrico County jail, Virginia, was respited on Thursday for the sixth time. His case will probably soon be decided by Chief Justice CHASE. PHILLIPS was sentenced to be hanged on the 6th day of November, 1868, and was respited by the Governor until the 18th day of December; he was then respited until the 30th day of February, 1869; then until the 26th of November, 1869; then until the 26th of January, 1870; then until the 26th of February, and now until the 20th of March.

At a recent meeting the Maine Historical Society was presented with a powder horn, covered with geographical, topographical, and other delineations wrought with a knife. Upon it is the following inscription: "ROBERT THOMAS, Jr., His Horn, Made at Fort Edward, Jan. 2, 1759." As described, it contains a sketch of New-York City, the Hudson River and some of its tributaries, Albany, Schenectady and other places, and many of the forts then in existence, and extending on the north as far as Lake Ontario. The English coat of arms is also handsomely carved upon it.

Deposition of Nickel by the Battery.

From the Journal Officiel of Paris we learn that at a late meeting of the French "National Academy of Sciences," held on the 17th of January, the Secretary, M. DUMAS, called special attention to the invention of Dr. ISAAC ADAMS, of Boston, in the deposition of nickel by the battery. M. DUMAS, the perpetual Secretary of the Academy, holds various offices of honor and trust, has deservedly a great influence in his own country, and is perfectly well known amongst our own chemists and scientific men. We have translated the remarks of M. DUMAS as a deserved tribute to an American inventor. M. DUMAS said:

"MR. J. ADAMS, of Boston, and M. GAIFFE have sent me a note expressing the desire that I would make known to the Academy the process by which they have succeeded in depositing upon objects of any nature a uniform and lasting plating of nickel in a pure state. I have the honor of placing under the notice of the Academy several objects covered with a brilliant coating of nickel by this process, which you will see merit attention. In the numerous experiments attempted heretofore by M. BECQUEREL, Sr., M. DE KURLZ, and others, they have succeeded in depositing upon objects a coating of nickel, but the means of which they made use had not the regularity and regularity necessary to an application really practical, which qualities are particularly marked in the method of Mr. ADAMS.

The Academy will notice with interest several of the results obtained by Mr. ADAMS. The coating of nickel is very uniform. It adheres perfectly. It is susceptible of any desirable thickness. It has a remarkable brilliant polish, which is very easily obtained. When the article comes from the bath it is only necessary to rub it with cotton impregnated with a little metallic powder to give it all its lustre. This electro-deposit of nickel can be well used for covering articles of saddlery, cutlery, pluming, clockmaking, tools, firearms, decoration, &c.

It may be used, and this is a valuable application, for covering plates designed for reprinting engravings, the deposition of the very slight abrasion of the nickel covering a perfect drawing can be repeatedly procured.

Nickel is white, and possesses the property of resisting the action of the air, acids, and any substance with which it may come accidentally in contact. Its hardness is superior to that of untempered steel, and its cost is little. So much for the useful and industrial side of the question. From a scientific point of view, continues M. DUMAS, the researches of Mr. J. ADAMS are of a nature to throw great light upon many of the phenomena displayed by electro deposits. When one wishes to separate the oxide of nickel by a simple alkali from one of its solutions, there remains either potash or soda combined with the nickel, and nickliate of potash is formed accidentally. It is precisely this difficulty of obtaining the oxides and the carbonates of nickel free from potash or soda which has defeated, until now, other experimenters.

The discovery of Mr. ADAMS consists above all in having observed that when a solution of nickel contains the slightest traces of potash, magnesia, &c., the metal, instead of being deposited pure, will be found mixed with little particles of peroxide of nickel, which take from the adherent plating all its cohesion and its beauty. Further, the American chemist employs nickel salts entirely free from a fixed alkaline substance, such as the double sulphate of nickel and ammonia, or the double chlorate of nickel and ammonia. From this moment the operation is made with the greatest ease. The salt is decomposed in the bath, the nickel is deposited on the object placed at the negative pole, and the solution keeps neutral.

The invention or discovery is no longer under trial. It has been shown to be practicable, and we may say that the new process belongs henceforth to the arts. It is a new and excellent victory, which it is permitted to us to chronicle."

The authors of this invention have discovered the cause which has until now hindered chemists from succeeding, and consequently they have brought the operation of nickel plating from the laboratory into practical use.

Felonious Assaults in Brooklyn.

A long period of comparative immunity from severe punishment appears to have tempted the roughs of Brooklyn to a degree of license whose excesses must shortly work their own cure. At 11 o'clock on Saturday night, while GEORGE WACHTER, a clerk in the grocery store corner of Fulton and Dowping streets, was engaged closing the store, he was set upon, without any obvious reason or provocation, by a party of roughs who were passing. One of them struck him several blows with a shovel, and the others commenced to pelt him with stones, one of which inflicted a severe cut on his head. Attracted to the spot by the cry of murder, Officer SWEENY was also struck by a stone while hastening to the rescue. The assailants dispersed on the appearance of the officer; but by a close pursuit, he succeeded in capturing four of them, who gave his name as OWEN GILLESPIE. He was identified by Mr. WACHTER as one of the leaders in the assault, and is now locked up for a hearing before Justice LYNCH.

On Saturday evening a drunken row occurred in the liquor store of GEORGE FITZGERALD, No. 16 Bridge-street. Two men, named PATRICK WALSH and FRANK KELLY, had a dispute about a job of work, when KELLY struck WALSH a blow with his hand. The latter seized a bung-starter and struck KELLY several blows, causing two severe wounds over the left eye. KELLY was taken to the Station House and had his wounds dressed by Dr. STONE, after which he was taken home by his friends. WALSH was detained on a charge of felonious assault.

German Immigration.

The directors of the German Immigration Society, in their eighty-sixth annual report, just completed, state that during the past year the Society expended $9,876 in aid of German immigrants in destitute circumstances, and the sick were cared for by an association of German physicians connected with the Society. There were 3,147 prescriptions furnished gratis, and the medicine supplied at reduced rates by apothecaries, members of the Society. The receipts amounted to $13,851; the expenses were $15,344, which, with a balance of $10,000 last year, leaves a surplus of $8,507. The assets of the Society were as follows: Astor fund, $20,000; general fund, $13,600; new extra fund, $2,000; Ludwig fund, $1,000; total, $36,000. During the past ten years $66,777 immigrants were landed at this port, over forty per cent of the whole immigration since 1820. While ten years ago only 37,446 Germans were landed at this port, the whole number during the past year amounted to 101,971, the majority of whom proceeded to the West. Immigrants are continually subjected to a great deal of inconvenience and delay. They are transported in ill-ventilated cars, and at the stations neither shelter nor food is provided for them. In referring to emigration to the South some discouraging facts have been furnished.

Outrageous Assault Upon a Woman.

On Saturday evening, between 9 and 10 o'clock, a determined attempt was made to outrage a married woman named Mrs. FULLMAN, who resides at No. 94 Bank-street. While proceeding from the residence of her mother in Twenty-seventh-street to her home, she was followed by a crowd of ruffians who addressed her in the most impertinent manner, and made improper overtures to her, which she indignantly rejected. When she arrived at Eighteenth-street, one of them advanced from the rest, and, placing his hand on her mouth, attempted to drag her into an adjoining stable. His companions assisted him, but before they could accomplish their purpose, Officers CAMPBELL and MORNING, of the Sixteenth Precinct, put in an appearance and arrested one of the party, who gave his name as ALBERT GORDON, of No. 26 Bank-street. The prisoner would have been brought up at the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday, but escaped in the early part of the morning. The Police are on the alert to discover him and his accomplices, and express themselves confident of bringing them to justice.

Five Points House of Industry—Resignation of Mr. Halliday.

Mr. HALLIDAY, who was so long and favorably known as the Superintendent of the Five Points House of Industry, formally tendered his resignation yesterday, in the presence of the children of the institution to the number of two hundred, and a large gathering of its friends and patrons.

In his farewell address he adverted to the condition of the House of Industry, and its progress under his management. Eleven years since, when he became connected with it, the establishment was only a miserable and decayed house, the number of its inmates was very small, and of its patrons still less. To-day they had a beautiful institution in the best stage of progress. They had many and influential patrons, and no matter who may be its future Superintendent, it could not fail to continue successful. He thanked God that it was so, and the knowledge of that fact moderated the sorrow he would otherwise experience at parting from those for whom he toiled and cared, and whom he loved so well. Mr. HALLIDAY's address produced a powerful effect upon his little hearers, and sobs and tears attested the sincerity of their affection and their regret at his departure. The proceedings were of a very interesting nature, and concluded with devotional exercises.

MONDAY, Feb. 28—A. M.

The Trade of the past week in Foreign Merchandise and also in the Domestic Commission line was fairly active. In the former the Currency prices are lower by reason of the further application of Greenbacks to Gold. But this readjustment goes quietly on without interfering with the perfect movement and the payment of Duties through the Custom House. The heavy Importers, who provided themselves in advance with Gold to pay their Customs at 120@122 ₱ cent., of course feel the difference between these figures and 116@117 ₱ cent. The entries for consumption and the withdrawals from Bond of Foreign Dry Goods and General Merchandise, measured by the Customs paid thereon, amounted to about seven million of dollars. In the Domestic Commission line, the prices of Cotton fabrics are lower, partly from a very sharp competition among the great jobbers, and partly from the belief that the fall in the raw material, now going on influenced by over-speculation for Spring delivery and the decline in Gold, will soon reduce the prices of manufactured Goods at the mills.

The additional fall in Gold since our last Monday's review is 3 ₱ cent. The difference in United States 5-20s, in the meantime, is barely ⅛ of one ₱ cent. The long 6 ₱ cents of 1881 are now at a premium of 1 ₱ cent. in Gold, and the chances are that with the March purchases of 5-20s for the Sinking Fund, during the month of March, they too will be equal to Gold before the close of the month. The Treasury will receive for Customs in March about $17,000,000 in Gold, while the Gold Interest payments will be less than $5,000,000, including the prepayments on the 10-40s already made. It is probable that the sales by the Secretary for the Sinking Fund Account will exceed the sales made in February. His programme for the month is expected to be announced by telegraph in time for the present issue of our paper. The Sinking Fund policy, enacted Feb. 25, 1863, but not inaugurated until the present Administration came into office a year ago, is fully vindicated not only in the reduction of the Gold-bearing Funded Debt to the amount of one hundred million of dollars—which of itself adds six millions for the succeeding year to the regular Sinking Fund—but in the effect upon the export and price of Gold, and the appreciation of the Public Credit abroad as well as at home. It was clearly foreseen by every one who had studied the operation of the Sinking Fund principle upon a Funded Debt which had reached its maximum when all the 7.30 ₱ cents were converted, that, however reckless speculation in the Gold Room might delay its legitimate results, the appreciation of the 5-20 Bonds to the par of Gold, on both sides the Atlantic, was inevitable. And the further important end of thus facilitating the quiet and gradual, but not less certain, appreciation of our Greenback and National Bank Note Circulation to the par of Gold, without a dollar's contraction of the Currency, was equally apparent.

As no contraction of the Currency has either preceded or attended the fall in the premium on Gold from 132 ₱ cent. since the close of last February to 116 ₱ cent. to-day, and as, on the contrary, the Greenback and National Bank circulation is now as fully employed as last year, and as prudently so, judging by the quarterly returns of the Banks just published, it stands to reason that the general trade and prosperity of the country are neither to be checked nor seriously unsettled by the appreciation in this Currency and the further fall in Gold. It will be found, we predict, as the business of the Spring progresses, that the Merchants and Railways and Bankers are all as actively engaged as last season, which, as heretofore remarked, was a decided improvement on the previous season, and our advices from most of the Roads West, as well as from the great trunk lines of the East, are to the effect of a steady increase of traffic, and a decided reduction of expenses, while the Southern Roads were never so well employed as at present, even before the war.

The weekly average of the Associated Local and National Banks in the Clearing House of this City, for the week ending Saturday last, Feb. 26, compares as follows with the previous week and with the corresponding week last year, to which we add the Specie and Currency balances in the New-York office of the United States Treasury at these dates respectively:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

A Paris dispatch says the Emperor has declared that his relations with his Ministers, both officially and personally, are entirely harmonious, and that he believes they have the sympathy of every honest Frenchman. The Conservative journals attack the Ministry. Le Pays declines to join in the attack, but protests against the proposed measures of M. OLLIVIER....The first day of the Carnival in Paris passed without the slightest disturbance....The Bishop of Laval, France, has published a letter declaring that he would die rather than aid the projects spoken of at Rome, but does not say what they are. Another attempt has been made by France, it is said, to dissuade the Council from acting against her interests....A demonstration by the conscripts at Lyons on Thursday last, was suppressed without bloodshed....Archbishop DE BONALD, of Lyons, is dead....The agents of the City of Boston have sent a steamer from Liverpool to cruise off the Madeira Islands to look out for the missing steamer experienced seamen regarding it probable that she has been disabled, and is trying to make the islands under canvas.... The struggle between the Church and the Revolutionary Parties in the Spanish Cortes is becoming intensified, the exciting cause being the question of prosecuting the Archbishop of Santiago for treason....The Duke of MONTPENSIER publishes a letter denying that he is a pretender to the Spanish throne, and asserting that he desires only to be considered a Spanish citizen, and longs for a definite Constitution.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate, Saturday, bills were introduced to provide for completing the State Industrial Asylum, and for the enlargement of the State Armory at Rochester. A motion was adopted requiring the Canal Auditor to report the interest paid on the debt since February, 1862, the amount of the debt matured since then, and other matters connected with the finances of the canals. A bill was then introduced making appropriations for new work, repairs and other expenses, and for the principal and interest of the debt beginning Oct. 1, 1870. The Senate adjourned to Tuesday morning.

In the Assembly, the Excise bill was made a special order for Wednesday evening next. The time for reporting the Cuban resolutions was extended to Wednesday. Bills were introduced to charter the Brooklyn Library Association, and to repeal the Railroad Consolidation act of 1869. The concurrent resolution in favor of the bill introduced in Congress by Mr. BENNETT, which appropriates money to pay the New-York State canal debt, in order to reduce the tolls, underwent debate, and was modified so as to omit the allusion to the Bennett bill, and merely ask Congress to make a donation for the object set forth above, and in this form was referred to the Committee on Canals. The House adjourned.

GENERAL.

The mail train on the Mississippi Central Railroad ran through a trestle three miles below Oxford, Miss., on Friday afternoon, demolishing the baggage, express and four passenger cars, and killing and maiming a great many passengers. At the last accounts twenty-one bodies had been taken from the wreck, including those of Mr. MCDONALD, the road master, two ladies, A. J. MCCONICO, the Treasurer of the road, his son, and the conductor of the train. The wounded have been taken to Oxford, where they received surgical attention. The trestle, through which the train ran, is forty feet high, and the accident was caused by a loose rail throwing the cars off the track after the locomotive had passed over.

The advices from Rio Janeiro via Lisbon represent LOPEZ as being forced to evacuate Passadero, leaving his sick and wounded, and the Count D'EU as moving across the Alpa River, "in the hope" of cutting off his retreat.

A telegram to the Cuban Junta in this City from Colonel VARONA, at Jacksonville, Fla., says the Winter campaign of the Spaniards came to a disastrous end at Najasa in January, and that they retreated to the towns; also that the unarmed Cubans were begging for arms to attack the towns.

The Lydia Thompson assault case came before the Police Court, in Chicago, on Saturday, the charge being the assault upon Mrs. STOREY, the editor of the Chicago Times. When Mr. STOREY appeared he was hissed by the spectators. The result of the trial was the imposition of fines on Miss THOMPSON, Miss MARKHAM and Mr. HENDERSON of $100 each for breach of the peace, and $250 each for the assault. Miss THOMPSON paid the fines and left. They are also to be prosecuted for rioting and inciting to riot.

The Secretary of the Treasury has directed the Assistant Treasurer at New-York to sell during the month of March $1,000,000 in gold and buy $1,000,000 in bonds for the sinking fund on alternate weeks, or a sale of two millions in gold. Also to purchase a million of bonds on each alternate week for the special fund.

The Governor on Saturday sent the name of Jesse GAY, of Plattsburg, to the Senate for Canal Appraiser, in place of Mr. E. P. BROOKS. The nomination was confirmed.

The Committee of the South Carolina Legislature, appointed at the last session to investigate matters in the Third Congressional District, report the existence of an organized party to defeat the objects of the Reconstruction acts by intimidation and violence. The Democrats on the Committee say the report is highly colored.

The Virginia House of Delegates has passed an Enabling bill, which legalizes the acts of the officials appointed by military authority, and provides for the appointment of their successors by the Governor.

Hon. HENRY L. DAWES addressed a political meeting at Nashua, N. H., on Saturday evening.

A party of Indians attacked a ranch at Pine Bluffs, near Laramie City, on Friday, and drove off the cattle. They were pursued and the cattle recaptured, but the Indians renewed the attack, retook the cattle, and killed ALBERT ROOT, whom they scalped and mutilated in a shocking manner.

Nothing has yet been heard in regard to the missing steamer City of Boston. Yesterday made the thirty-first day in which her fate or whereabouts have been a mystery. The Bremen steamer Schmidt, now thirty-six days out, and long overdue at this port, has not been heard from.

An effort was made in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, Saturday, to bring the case of Dr. SCHOEPPE before the Court, under the recent act of the Legislature of that State. The Court thought it could not be done unless by a new writ, the decision on the writ of error having been given before the act was passed.

The schooner Benjamin Butler, from Elizabethport, N. J., for Providence, was cut in two early on Friday morning off Watch Hill, R. I., by an unknown vessel, and instantly sunk. Four lives were lost, including that of the Captain. The mate was picked up insensible by the steamer Thetis, when he had been in the water half an hour.

A meeting was held in behalf of the American Christian Commission at the Fifth-avenue Collegiate Reformed Church, last evening. Addresses were made by Rev. Drs. ADAMS and DURYEA.

A meeting was held on Saturday night at Ittner's Hall, Tremont, composed of the principal representatives of both parties, Republican and Democratic, to nominate officers for the town of West Farms. Soon after the organization of the meeting, a motion was made for adjournment, owing to a disagreement which pervaded the organization, and the motion prevailed.

What Should Follow Reconstruction.

For the Southern people, it must be confessed, reconstruction has been a trying process. Its justification has been the necessity in which it had its birth. If in some respects its operation has been harsh, at least let us not forget that no harsh measure was resorted to until others of a milder character had been tried without success. The question to be decided was, whether the States which were out of the Union should be brought back on the terms wished for by those who had resisted the authority of the Union, or on the terms required by the States by whose people the unity of the Republic had been preserved. The answer carried with it the successive efforts at reconstruction, and the demand on which it rested is now virtually satisfied. Only two States await the final action of Congress, and of the result in their case there is no doubt. The work is all but finished. A few days more and reconstruction will be completed.

Authority vindicated on the basis of justice, the suggestions of generosity may now be heeded with entire safety. With the States restored to the Union, the restoration of their people to the full status of citizenship comes next in order. The disabilities they labor under are penalties which have been otherwise paid. The indebtedness to Federal authority represented by these disabilities has been discharged by the conditions of reconstruction; the contingencies against which the test oath was designed to provide have been amply covered by the guarantees which reconstruction has exacted. Disabilities, in fact, have lost their uses. They add nothing to the strength of the Union or the recuperative energies of the States themselves. On the contrary, they form almost the only remaining source of irritation. They deprive the localities of the services of the very men who are best fitted to aid them; and they serve as a perpetual reminder of a subjection which though at one time inevitable, should not in any form be made perpetual.

The Southern Republicans, in carrying forward the work of reconstruction, set an example which Congress ought promptly to imitate. They were careful enough in providing substantial guarantees against a reversal of the results of reconstruction, but they were at the same time generous enough to avoid all needless distinctions founded upon the bitter past. They had the power, and they exerted it wisely. They imposed no disability. They enacted no penalty that could perpetuate rancorous feeling. They asserted the equality of citizenship, and with that they were content.

The disabilities which remain are those over which Congress has retained control. It is honorable to the Republicans of Mississippi, and of other States, that they have signalized the triumph of their principles by urging upon Congress the earliest possible exercise of its authority in this regard. The appeal has not been in vain. We have General BUTLER'S assurance that the Reconstruction Committee realizes the necessity for the step, and wearied of the exceptional exercise of its favors, is preparing a general measure upon the subject. Let us hope that the promise will be speedily fulfilled, and fulfilled in a manner that shall indicate The desire of the Committee to render it acceptable to the class whom it most concerns. The case is not wholly free from obstacles, as an article we reproduce from the Richmond State Journal shows. But the obstacles are not insurmountable, if those who really cooperate with General BUTLER are prepared now to act magnanimously towards the Southern people. Amnesty will derive half its glory and half its efficacy from the manner in which it is presented. Make it genuine and graceful, free it from all superfluous conditions, and it will be a boon for which multitudes in every Southern State will be grateful.

From the Mississippi to the Lakes.

One of the most sanguine believers in the future of New-York, the City of his love and well-won success, was wont to say that no canal or railroad could be built upon the continent without contributing to the commerce and wealth of this Metropolis, and that, within reasonable limits, all should have the help of its influence and capital. We are less positive. We recognize the possibility of a diversion of a portion of the grain and produce trade of the interior continent to New-Orleans or to Montreal, or perhaps in the development of the new energies of the South to Hampton Roads. We have as much faith in the possible future as he, but far less in its absolute certainty, and there is a class of works, of routes of intercommunication, which New-York should especially encourage.

The general policy should be to keep the ebb and flow of the trans-continental tide of commerce north of the Ohio River and within that wonderful valley which has the forty-second parallel of latitude as the centre of its general outline. To that route is necessarily tributary the whole commerce of the lake region, and the traffic which comes to the shores of Lake Michigan or Lake Superior, directly or indirectly, feeds the harbor of New-York. Several schemes are now projected or in progress designed to extend the tributary area of the lake region as emigration develops its resources.

The most northerly of these are the Northern Pacific and the Mississippi and Lake Superior Railroads, terminating at Duluth, on the western shore of Lake Superior. It is a far distant point, but it promises ultimately to concentrate the trade, especially in grain, of an immense and fertile region in Northern and Central Minnesota and a large part of Iowa and Wisconsin. The Northern Pacific, too, stretching across Minnesota and through Dakota to the Pacific, will be tributary to a terminus from which there is a continuous water communication with New-York. The distance from New-York to Duluth can hardly be less than two thousand miles, yet grain can be transported in bulk from the wharves of the latter to our own with only a single transhipment, and that within the limits of this State. The roads leading to Duluth, therefore, are as much feeders of this port as the Erie or the Central Railroad. Duluth holds the same relation to the far Northwest that Chicago has to the West proper; its elevators, now in course of erection—as a recent dispatch informed us—are as capacious as those of Chicago after thirty years' growth.

Other and similar projects are on foot to cross the broad, low plateau that intervenes between the Lakes and the Mississippi. Two of these are canal schemes, the most northerly being from Green Bay westward, and the other from Chicago, following in the main the route of the Illinois Canal. Parallel with each other, they are so widely separated that they do not compete; and lying in different States, they are free from the embarrassment of legislative jealousies, while both appeal to State pride and spirit of enterprise. In the first flush of the development of the trans-continental railway system, there were many who supposed that the day of canals was over, and the iron track would be all-sufficient for the future. But every good water route has retained its importance in our commercial system, and the opening of the Suez Canal, with the new efforts making towards the construction of a water-way across the Isthmus of Darien, are fresh proofs of the essential convenience of transportation in bottoms.

Without going into detail, or expressing preference for any special line of transit, we recognize the importance and necessity, even, of canal communication between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi. Within a year or two past an earnest effort has been made to divert the grain trade down the Mississippi. In a laudable spirit of enterprise, the St. Louis merchants have erected elevators in connection with others at New-Orleans, from whence a considerable amount of grain is now being shipped direct to Europe What is done at St. Louis may be done all along the Upper Mississippi, wherever a railroad comes to it from the West, and every elevator built on the banks of the Mississippi is something deducted from the aggregate of New-York commerce.

We have, it is true, the long advantage of a temperate climate, and those who know the risk and loss involved in moving new grain in hot latitudes will appreciate that element in the competition. Even on our own lines there is an immense annual loss from the heating of grain, which renders it unfit for any purpose except distillation. But this condition is of small importance in the Winter season to the New-Orleans competitors, and exists for ourselves in the hot weeks immediately following the harvest. It is a condition upon which the St. Louis merchants have calculated, and they are tolerably shrewd in their day and generation. Barring that one embarrassment, grain may be transferred from St. Louis to Liverpool by uninterrupted water communication, with only a single transhipment, costing a cent a bushel, at New-Orleans.

The transhipment is the smallest item of cost,—in fact it is an economy, for grain needs handling and cooling in transportation, just as cattle need water on their way to market. Suppose these two grand canals should be constructed from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi, capable of floating in a single bottom, say, 6,000 bushels of wheat, and requiring a transhipment on Lake Michigan to vessels having a much larger carrying capacity, and still another transhipment at Buffalo or Oswego. The handling at two points on the route would bring the grain cooler and cleaner to market, the risk of climate would be trivial, the time occupied in transit would be [illegible] than [illegible] Orleans, and the control of the trade of the West would remain with New-York for all time,—the return traffic, the sale of imported and manufactured merchandise, equalizing in magnitude that which flows eastward.

It is from motives like these,—not from any cowardly fear of the competition of active rivals, but from a desire that the honest advantages of New-York should be earnestly improved,—that we look with lively interest towards all the enterprises which tend to resist the diverting influences of the Mississippi and the St. Lawrence, and bring the torrent of Western traffic into the valley of the lakes, of which this harbor is the natural debouchure.

The Tennessee Democracy.

Elsewhere we publish a letter from our Knoxville correspondent, once more arraigning the Tennessee Legislature for illiberality and partisanship, and citing fresh facts in proof of his charges.

The bitterness which has long ruled Tennessee politics is matter of common knowledge. We certainly do not regard the Republican record as wholly free in this respect, in years gone by; but the airs of incredulity, of injured innocence, and of indignation, with which some of the Democracy seem to have received our correspondent's former allegations, are especially out of place, and can impose upon no one. The action of the Democratic majority in the Legislature upon the suffrage question is the exceptional instance of an exhibition by them of a liberal and catholic spirit. Our correspondent seems to think that even here they made a virtue of necessity, and had a dread of Congress rather than a hearty sympathy with the blacks.

One measure of the Constitutional Convention gives color to this view. This body, in according the right of franchise to the blacks, has coupled it with a general property qualification. Now, as the latter provision was never required of the whites, its sole aim seems to be to disfranchise as many as possible of the negroes. In this respect Tennessee has followed the lead of Kentucky, in which State the reason of their action was boldly avowed by the Democracy. We do not propose to be uncharitable in questioning motives—the Tennessee Republicans will not look the gift-horse in the mouth. But it must be confessed that, in thus discounting what will soon be proclaimed a national law respecting franchise, the Convention has rather feared the Fifteenth Amendment than aimed to favor the freedman.

However, passing this single measure, the repeal of the Tennessee Free School law, and the sanction by the Convention of this repeal, form an index to the real spirit of Tennessee Democracy. A proposition to compel the State to support free schools was voted down in the Convention—a course of action which shows either that the Democracy in that State have not yet learned that free education means liberty and progress, or that, knowing this, they feared that it did not also mean Democratic rule. A Democratic meeting in Southern Indiana once took ground, we believe, against common schools as "Republican allies." Perhaps the two Democratic bodies in session at Nashville regard them with the same suspicion.

The "Chinese" policy of the Democracy in Tennessee is shown, not only in their restrictions on suffrage and on popular education, but in their "anti-Northern" measure, whereby two years more of residence are required under the new Constitution than under the old, for holding certain offices. It is shown, too, in the act sweeping out of office every officer in the State now holding his commission under the old Franchise laws. This act, exactly parallel to the partisanship of the Kentucky Democracy, is clearly designed simply to secure party ascendency. "East Tennessee," says our correspondent, "progresses, and would soon be the nursery of great industrial enterprises, if the proscriptive, intolerant Democracy of Middle and West Tennessee did not drag her backwards." But the lesson of liberality and public spirit is a slow one to learn. It is learned only after partisanship, local exclusiveness and jealousy have done vast damage to the common welfare; and very happy is that State or city which, at any price, ever learns it at all.

The Woman's Medical College.

The recent disgraceful occurrence at Bellevue Hospital between the students and the female medical students should call the attention of the public to the duty of providing more thoroughly for the female students of medicine. The Press and the pulpit abound with exhortations on the necessity of opening new paths of labor to women. All who have daughters to provide for feel how limited is the field in which they must hereafter earn their own living. At present, for girls of the higher class, teaching and keeping boarding houses seem to be almost the only two "professions" open. And even those who can reasonably hope to be able to secure a support for their daughters, must see how much more dignified and useful a position it is for a woman to be engaged in some work demanding the employment of mind and requiring education. Merely to be waiting for marriage is not a very satisfactory calling for a woman of powers and culture.

One institution in this City has especially sought to open a new career for women,—and one to which she is especially fitted. The best physicians now in the community, as every one knows, are the women—the mothers and sisters of thousands of households. The greatest physical responsibility in society is now intrusted to them—the entire care and bodily nurture of little children. Their tact, watchfulness and judgment are continually guarding and securing the health of the whole coming generation. No eye is so close a judge of the symptoms of one she is interested in, as a woman's. No nursing is so careful and faithful. A woman's common sense in the treatment of incipient diseases is often worth whole volumes of the science of the schools. She is, too, by nature, a hygienist far more than man. Her senses are more acute, and her employment has been especially in arranging clothing, and determining food and exercise for children, and securing pure air.

The Woman's Infirmary and College, in Second-avenue, seeks especially to add the benefits of science to the natural tact and experience of woman, in the knowledge and practice of medicine. It has been founded and built up by two female physicians of thorough training, who have long practiced with entire acceptance in this City—the Misses Drs. BLACKWELL. This College, in harmony with the peculiar adaptation of women for the subject is, we believe, the only one which has founded a Professorship of "Hygiene"—the art of securing health and preventing disease. The Institution consists of two departments—one for instruction, the College proper, and the other for practice among the poor, the Infirmary. The latter has treated gratuitously during the past year, 6,413 cases, of whom 116 were received into the house, and 569 treated in their own homes. The young practitioners obtain their first experience in this practice. In the College the course is peculiarly thorough, requiring a period of study of three years, of which the students must spend eighteen months at the institution. The various medical colleges and hospitals of the City have granted the privilege to these female students of attending cliniques, which has given the occasion to the recent disturbance at Bellevue. It is obvious, however, that this is only a spasmodic outbreak of barbarism. Female students will soon visit every hospital, as they do now in Vienna. But what is needed is a more liberal endowment of this excellent College, and then the female physicians and students can hold their own cliniques without fear of disturbance.

Interviewers.

It is rather dismal to think that there is after all nothing new under the sun, but it is greatly to be feared that it is true. When President LINCOLN was informed by an interviewer of the period that one of his Generals took too much whisky, he archly expressed the wish that somebody would send a barrel of the same sort to divers other of his commanders. We all hoped that the witticism was original. But, alas, CHARLES II. had said something very like it before. DRYDEN tells us, apropos of his indecent play of "Evening Love," the plot of which he took from CALDERON, that some one accused him to the King of plagiarism, but that the monarch "only desired that they who accused me of theft would always steal him plays like mine." We fear, too, that the "interviewers" have been heard of before, and that, like many words and phrases branded by some of our English cousins as "Americanisms," but which are to be found even in such well-known pages as those of SHAKESPEARE and CHAUCER, interviewing is no thing of modern growth, but claims the reverence due to antiquity.

When we say that two of our late Presidents were killed by interviewers, we are apt to think that great men were never before slain by such a cause, and that the cases of HARRISON and TAYLOR are unique in history. But probably ALEXANDER the Great saw his convivial interviewers too often, and there is not the least doubt that the interview of L. Q. FLAMINIUS with the King of Bithynia was the immediate occasion of the death of HANNIBAL. The universal practice of interviewing at Rome furnished a plausible opportunity for the assassination of JULIUS CÆSAR; and, to come down to more modern times, it is beyond peradventure that the interviews of Sir HUDSON LOWE hastened the death of the Great NAPOLEON. The truth is that history and tradition are packed with instances of the mischief wrought by this prying class, and that from the days when that luckless mari sage of a Menelaus went to Crete, leaving his Helen to the passionate assaults of Paris, down to our modern era, when the same thing happens every day and is chronicled in the newspapers, interviewing has existed as an art more or less fine, and probably will do so until the end of the chapter. There are, however, periods of action and reaction, of rise and decline in this as in other arts, which are brought about by various accidental or providential circumstances. Thus, after the interview of Marsyas with Apollo, or that of the eager day-god with the lovely Acantha, we can readily understand how interviewing went out of fashion for a time among the Greeks. A later instance was that of poor WILLIS—who perhaps deserves to be styled the first great American interviewer—whose experience was almost as discouraging for disciples in the art. The memory of catastrophes like these dies out, however, in time; the beauties and joys of interviewing again loom up to dazzle the imagination, and an era comes, as among ourselves to-day, when the delightful old custom blossoms like the rose.

The cardinal principle of interviewing is, of course, that no man has a right to his own time. He may have a right to his own coat, dinner or horse which take time to earn, but these are clearly very different things. It is plain that idle or impudent curiosity, or a desire for self-aggrandizement at the expense of others, warrants any species of intrusion at all hours and places, and that only absurd fastidiousness will object to it. The ridiculous old custom of sending up cards—implying the right of accepting or declining a visit on the part of the recipient—is, of course, exploded by the triumph of this principle. There are other coterminous principles—but this is the basic and immutable one. Its sense and significance can be abundantly illustrated. None can dispute that it is of more consequence that public men should devote their hours to defining their position to half-drunken reporters, to the end of satisfying prurient inquisitiveness, than that those hours should be devoted to the public service. Equally manifest is it—to compare great things with small—that authors and artists and their agents should consume without introduction the moments of the journalist who criticises their work. Their own opinions of the latter are obviously of so much more consequence than those of a disinterested observer, and it is of so much greater moment for public information that the former views should be promulgated than the latter, that the delicacy and propriety of this custom cannot for an instant be questioned. These instances are fairly typical of a host of others. So long as morbid curiosity or short-sighted selfishness can be gratified, in a free country it would be ungraceful as well as inconvenient to attempt opposition.

Besides, opposition brings its punishment. It is true that the mud thrown by the interviewers brushes off easily when dry. But who likes to be pelted for all that? Moreover we should remember that although the interviewers collect much dirt, they occasionally gather in something bright and precious as well. They go about, indeed, like the suite of the first Russian Ambassador painted by MACAULAY, who says they swept through the London ballrooms dropping pearls and lice. Let us take the good and the bad together since it is not given to our generation to enjoy them apart; and, so long as omnipotent public opinion tolerates the interviewers and their mediums, let us have patience and endure.

Several papers give lists of the distribution of offices under the new "compromise" reported to have been agreed to by the rival sections of the Democratic Party. These programmes are all mere guess-work from beginning to end—the names of future officeholders being purposely kept out of sight until the battle is over. Only one thing seems to be certain, that this fight never admitted of being compromised. It is becoming very clear that the plan of the campaign was settled beforehand, and that the leaders in it were proof against all the temptations which the other side could offer. What is to become of the only interest we care about in the struggle—the interest of the public—must still be deemed a doubtful question. We want a good Government and an honest Judiciary, and shall continue our "war to the knife" till we get these reforms. What the names or positions of our enemies may be does not signify a jot. All "Rings" are fatal to the objects we have in view, and if the new alliance cannot ensure us against the supremacy of dishonest politicians, it will have ended in a dismal failure. However, we wait and hope.

This week the new Erie bill will probably come under discussion in the Legislature. We have printed the text of the bill, and divested of all technicalities, we may explain its purport to be this: the bond fide shareholders everywhere to be sacrificed, and the concern in its entirety to be handed over to the clique which has made it one of the memorable scandals of the world. The new bill, it will at once be seen, is in harmony with previous legislation on the same subject, and with the code of commercial morals drawn up by the Erie clique. We shall now watch the progress of the measure, and afterwards endeavor to compute how much money it cost the promoters. The golden shower is once again to descend on that thirsty soil at Albany. What does Governor HOFFMAN say to the prospect? Is he free to express an independent opinion still, or have the same influences which induced him to sign the other Erie bill already overcome his scruples?

The Evening Post states that "no books were in any case removed" by Collector BAILEY. This must be news to the Collector himself, who has admitted that he carried off the books of certain firms bodily. The Post justifies the gift of an official post to a clerk in the employ of one of the implicated firms on the ground that he was a poor man, and had a family. We say that a Government officer who is trying to get up evidence against a firm, and offers a good post to any clerk who will appear as a witness against his employers, goes an improper way to work, and it is quite beside the question to say that the suborned person has a large family. The Post also wonders that we who oppose the "Whisky Ring" now complain of anything Mr. BAILEY thinks proper to do. Our reason is, that our respect for law, on which the very framework of society depends, is greater even than our hatred for "Rings," and, consequently, that we would have "Rings" broken down by lawful and constitutional measures; not by arbitrary or suspicious proceedings. In these days a strict regard even for the smallest forms of law is incumbent upon all who profess to represent the Government.

Fashion articles for ladies are often amazing specimens of literary composition, especially when they are cut up into paragraphs of one line each. The style is after the French—but so long after it that all trace of the original is lost. A French writer infuses a modicum of wit into his lines, while the imitators merely chop up leaden sentences very small. They remind one of little blocks of raw meat compared with some high example of French cookery. But fashion articles for men are, if possible, a trifle more absurd than these for the other sex. In the first place, they are evidently written by female hands, and consequently some not unnatural but rather startling, mistakes are made in the description of divers important garments. The writers try to conceal their lack of knowledge by a plentiful sprinkling of French words—a process indispensable to all fashion articles. One of these authorities informed a grateful public yesterday that a certain coat was "distingué and stylish, as Parisian ensembles generally are, no matter how intrinsically bizarre." This counterfeit coin passes sometimes, but it is to be hoped that no man is rash enough to attire himself according to the instructions of these lady oracles. People in outlandish costume are not allowed to wander about the streets,—not even if they are paid to advertise one of Mr. FISK'S intellectual entertainments at the Grand Opera House.

The "Lydia Thompson Troupe" have again succeeded in attracting public attention to themselves—this time in the character of censors of the Press. We cannot commend their method of resenting unpalatable criticisms, especially as they ought by this time to resemble the rhinoceros in impenetrability to attack. Violent abuse and outrageous personalities do not injure the persons at whom they are aimed—the public being exceedingly just in its judgments with reference to all such assaults. This fact ought to be more remembered than it is by others besides the Amazons who "cowhided" a Chicago journalist. We know nothing whatever about the rights and wrongs of this Chicago quarrel, but when we see the paltry fear which so many people entertain of foul and scurrilous attacks upon them, we are constrained to admire the manly, and even grand, attitude assumed by General BUTLER the other day in the House—"If there is one thing on earth I am superior to it is the newspapers." Better far to speak thus than to cower down before "journalists" who go about proclaiming "Fear me—I will blacken your character, yea, and the character of all who are dear to you if you dare to remonstrate." Honest criticism, a fair argument, reasonable attack,—no public man can afford to despise these. But mere wanton calumnies recoil on the heads of the calumniators—and General BUTLER does better to defy the newspapers altogether,—flat blasphemy as that may seem to some—than to be afraid to call his soul his own.

For a people who go ahead so much, we do not seem to be, or to have been, a people much in the habit of looking ahead—a fact which may be evidenced by a variety of instances and "which nobody can deny." One of these is the neglect to provide a proper place of exercise for the regiments of the National Guard—a convenience which one would suppose a popular Government would be especially anxious about. But there is now an opportunity of remedying this defect by making a parade ground of the broad level space lying in the Central Park, a little way from the chief entrance. No better place could be chosen, probably, or one more in keeping with the idea of a people's park—one not intended to be a picture ground, but a pleasure ground, and which even as a picture ground would not be injured in the least by an occasional array and review of our "bold soldier boys."

A country paper is of opinion that the cost of Royalty in England is not so very great after all. Then let it reckon up the following figures. The Queen receives an annual allowance of £385,000, out of which, of course, the Royal households are to be maintained; the Prince of WALES receives £40,000 a year, besides a revenue from the Duchy of Cornwall, amounting to about £55,000 a year; the Princess of WALES gets £10,000 a year; the Princess of Prussia, £8,000; the Duke of EDINBURGH, £15,000; Princess LOUIS of Hesse, £6,000; Princess CHRISTIAN, £6,000; Duchess of CAMBRIDGE, £6,000, and £3,000 to her daughter; Princess TECK, £5,000; Duke of CAMBRIDGE, £12,000—besides which he receives £3,461 a year, salary as Commander-in-Chief, and pay as officer of regiments to which he is attached. Let it also be borne in mind that as the younger Princes and Princesses grow up their wives or husbands must be provided for, and then their children, and so on till the crack of doom. Is that a trifle for a people oppressed with pauperism to bear? Two millions and a half of dollars in gold, seems a good round sum for one family to receive.

The telegraph informs us that the Duke of RICHMOND has accepted the Tory leadership in the House of Lords. Of all the Dukes named for this position when Lord CAIRNS retired, this one is, perhaps, the least incompetent—but that is not saying much for him. The Duke of RICHMOND'S most intimate friends must be very uneasy when they consider his total unfitness to act as political leader. As before, Mr. DISRAELI represents the brains of his party—the Duke must stand for "lineage," although his own extends no further back than to CHARLES II. and the Duchess of PORTSMOUTH. "It is the "adventurer," as the country gentlemen call the man of genius who condescends to lead them, that really pulls the strings, while Dukes are only the puppets.

The Efforts for the Reduction of Taxation—Unanimity of the Republican Press.

In an article specially prepared for the TIMES of Monday last, and since reproduced in many of the Republican papers of the country, it was shown that President GRANT'S decision in favor of an immediate material reduction of taxation, and the decision of the House Committee on Ways and Means to the same effect, were enthusiastically indorsed by such sterling Republican papers as the Rochester Chronicle, Albany Evening Journal, Troy Whig, Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, Boston Advertiser, Boston Commonwealth, Worcester Gazette, New-Haven Journal & Courier, Hartford Courant, Newark Advertiser, Trenton Gazette, Scranton Republican, Detroit Post, Chicago Tribune and Chicago Post. Since that date many other influential Republican papers have spoken no less forcibly, coinciding in opinion with the TIMES that the needs of the people at large demand that Congress should not delay longer to relieve the people of a portion of the heavy burdens which the excessive taxation now lays upon them with crushing weight. The outspoken article from the St. Louis Democrat, one of the ablest Republican papers in the great Northwest, which we quoted entire in the TIMES on Tuesday last, showed that the Republicans of Missouri cordially support the President in his changed views on this subject, and that, so far as that section is concerned, he has fully understood the wishes of the people. Other Republican papers, East and West, have since spoken quite as plainly, and shown that the feeling that immediate relief is absolutely demanded is not confined to any section, but is acutely felt throughout the length and breadth of the land. If there is any doubt expressed it is that the proposed amount, $30,000,000, is not enough, although the announcement of a reduction even to that amount would be hailed with acclamations of delight and most enthusiastically indorsed.

Thus the Rochester Democrat, while saying that Congress ought not to yield to the needs and demands of the President, but of the people, says that there is no doubt that if Congress does consult the needs and demands of the people, as manifested through the Press of the country, measures will be taken largely to reduce taxation. And the Democrat adds that should it prove after all that the Secretary of the Treasury and the President, too, oppose such reduction, Congress ought not any the less to give heed to the emphatic demands of the people in favor of such reduction.

The Niagara Falls Gazette says that some such reduction seems to be demanded by the business interests of the country, and that the people are quite unanimous therefor.

The Syracuse Standard favors a modification of the income tax, and says that the reduction proposed, upon the hypothesis that it is safe, will be exceedingly grateful to the people and will indicate, among other things, the rapid approach to a condition of prosperity and credit.

The Auburn News asks that the reduction may be so made that it shall, first of all, relieve the workingmen upon whom the burdens of taxation are most oppressive, and it urges that the income tax should be the last abolished, as it falls upon those best able to bear it.

The Boston Journal is "glad to see" that the President and Congress are on the right track leading to the reduction of taxation, and says that it was inevitable that every sound-minded, dispassionate investigator of the present depressed condition of the country should come to the same conclusion. The Journal adds that if we look at three-fourths of our leading interests to-day we find that it costs so much to carry them on that taxation eats up the margin of profit; and it urges that the remission of taxation should be as equal and impartial as possible, so that no burden taken from one branch shall be transferred to another. And the limit in this respect, it says, should be the actual wants of the Government, administered in the most prudent and economical manner.

The Salem (Mass.) Gazette says that if expenses are reduced accordingly, this reduction of taxation will not interfere with the gradual reduction of the national indebtedness; that "if the reduction is an indication that Congress is to look closely into the department estimates and to reduce them where they may be reduced, it will be a beneficent measure—and the whole matter is in the hands of Congress."

The Northampton (Mass.) Gazette & Courier says that it is creditable to President GRANT that he has so far modified his expressed opinions as to coincide with the very great desire of the people that the burden of taxation should be lightened. The Gazette & Courier adds that it is of the more consequence to the country that business prosperity should be placed upon a sure and substantial basis, than that our debt should be immediately and materially reduced—thus coinciding with the views heretofore expressed in the TIMES.

The Litchfield (Conn.) Enquirer gives its opinion in favor of an immediate reduction in two words, saying that some such action will be both popular and right.

A citizen of Philadelphia, in a communication to the Bulletin of that city, urges that the relief proposed be doubled, and that it is inexplicable that we must be paying war taxes in times of profound peace. Trade, he says, languishes, labor strikes in vain against a universal reduction of wages, and shall our taxes not come down to an equality? The correspondent pointedly adds that the interest of every man in this question is none the less because compulsory; and that it stands to-day paramount to their affection for any party, exceeding their attachment to any political dogma that can be agitated either in or out of Congress.

The Philadelphia Inquirer alludes to the persistent outcry which the country has long uttered against the enormous and unnecessary rate of taxation maintained by the Government, and says that the depression in business of every sort throughout the land renders it especially incumbent on Congress to do something at once towards a reduction of the present enormous tax levies. The Inquirer declares that the determination to discharge the immense war debt of the country in fifteen years is one not only wanting in good policy, but uncalled for and undesired even by those in whose supposed interest it is made, and that such a course is a bad one for the prosperity of the country, a fact which Congressmen should heed, for if they do not they will, should they obtain a renomination, undoubtedly be defeated at the polls.

The Frederick (Md.) Republican & Advertiser says that on no other subject is there half the unanimity that prevails on this—that "Down with the Taxes" is everywhere the cry; and that for the President's candid acknowledgment of this fact, the whole people, North, South, East and West, will thank him and thank him heartily.

From the beginning, the Indianapolis Journal has been earnest, consistent and outspoken in favor of reduction, and now it congratulates the Republicans of Indiana upon the announcement of a change in the policy of the Administration in this respect,—a change, it says, clearly dictated to the Government by the sentiment of the people, and which will be indorsed and responded to by them in so emphatic a manner that the Republican Party in that State will enter the campaign with victory assured from the outset.

The Chicago Republican expresses its belief that the great mass of the people have made up their minds that taxes must be reduced, and that they do not indorse the policy of Secretary BOUTWELL in advocacy of a continuous reduction of the national debt on the general scale of past transactions. The Republican further believes that we can reduce the aggregate of national taxes some $35,000,000 or $65,000,000, and yet leave enough to bring down the principal of the public debt by a very large figure.

AMUSEMENTS

Announcements of the Day.

The latest drama from the pen of Mr. BOUCICAULT is to be acted to-night at Wallack's Theatre. "Lost at Sea" is the title of the novelty, the production of which was looked for some months up at Niblo's. Messrs. J. W. WALLACK, FISHER, STODDART and MARLOWE, and Misses HENRIQUES and EFFIE GERMON are now to fill the leading parts....Mr. DOMINICK MURRAY commences an engagement at Wood's Museum to-night. Miss JOSEPHINE FIDDES is to act with him in a play referred to as quite fresh and called "The Golden Bubble,".....A series of performances by Miss KATE FISHER commences to-night at the Bowery. "Maseppa" is to be the principal play...Several new acts are announced for rehearsal at the San Francisco Minstrel Hall, and the earliest appearances of Messrs. NORMAN and LAVELLEC are to be effected there, simultaneously....The All Ben Abdallah Troupe return to the New-York Circus this evening, and add their singular feats to the variety of a very comprehensive programme.

Miscellaneous Mention.

SATURDAY AT BOOTH'S.

The Saturday evening entertainments at Booth's have not been too cheerful since the outset of the present season, and the latest one has been especially dull. Mr. BOOTH's company is not very strong, and its weakness is extremely apparent in the interpretation of such a play as "Fazio." A great artist, in the plenitude of her power, is needed to represent Bianca, and actors, rather than mere reciters, are looked for to sustain the other parts. Mrs. EMMA WALLER is not a great artist, and some of the persons figuring in "Fazio" have slight claim to the name even of comedians. Hence it may be inferred that the rehearsal of the piece, on the occasion we write of, was not conspicuous for merit or for interest. Mrs. WALLER acted Bianca with as much intelligence and conservatism as she did Meg Merrilies, and with almost as much vigor and noise. It is, of course, preferable to listen to lines spoken, as Polonius says, with good accent and discretion, to noting the elocutionary efforts of an unpracticed girl; but—for lack of the skill by which art brings nature within the grasp of ear and eye—a greater disregard for traditional methods of expression would be more welcome still. Mr. W. E. SHERIDAN's Fazio was portrayed after the same fashion as Bianca, but in view of the secondary importance of the rôle had, of course, fewer evidences of approval from an audience that rewarded Mrs. WALLER's unwearying earnestness by frequent applause. The Duke of Florence was embodied by Mr. FENNO with sufficient dignity. The efforts of the other artists demand no record here.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF BROOKLYN.

The fourth Philharmonic concert of the season was held in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Saturday evening. The audience was, as on previous occasions, of a select, appreciative character, and completely filled the hall. The pièce de résistance of the instrumental programme was a symphony by RAFF, (No. 2, Op. 140, in C major.) The execution of this intricate piece of harmony was of a very creditable kind. The cornet parts were slightly deficient in light and shade, and rather interfered with the otherwise admirable balance of the instrumentation. A novel feature was introduced in presenting WEBER's "Slumbrous Quartette," for French horns, which was artistically rendered. The singing of Miss KELLOGG was marked by all that unrivaled purity of tone and perfection of tasteful execution which constitute the perennial charms of our great prima donna. The inevitable encores were responded to with her usual good nature. The concert concluded with an overture, "Columbus," by Mr. GEO. F. BRISTOW, one of the members of the orchestra. The piece is of a floridly descriptive character, and it afforded an agreeable contrast to the severely classical nature of the rest of the programme.

HAHNEMANN HOSPITAL BENEFIT.

The musico-dramatic performance in aid of this Hospital, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society, promises to be one of the finest affairs of the season. The entertainment occurs at the Union League Theatre to-morrow. As far as the dramatic portion of it is concerned, we need only say that some of Mr. BOOTH's most popular artists have tendered their services. Features of interest will be the guitar solo by Miss MORANT and the singing of Mr. MATTHISON. The musical programme consists of the overtures to MOZART's "Marriage of Figaro" and to NICOLAI's "Merry Wives of Windsor," and of potpourris from VERDI's "Rigoletto," WEBER's "Freischuetz," and GOUNOD's "Romeo et Juliette." The sale of tickets at No. 283 Broadway closes this evening.

Proposed Strike of Coal Miners To-Morrow.

It is reported through private sources from the coal regions of Pennsylvania, that a general strike among the miners has been decided upon, to begin Tuesday, March 1. From the secret manner in which the arrangements for a suspension of work have been agreed upon between the workmen, there is great economy in getting at the real cause of their grievances, but it is generally understood that the difficulty arises from the recent decline in coal at New-York. Prices having dropped considerably at the last auction sale of Scranton coal here this week, the miners' wages. It is even telegraphed that the Lackawanna Coal Company has received orders from the Chief of the Miners' Union to immediately discontinue the sale of anthracite coal in New-York and Eastern markets at the low auction rates. The Schuylkill Company, it is said, will also strike.

Origin of the American Navigation Laws—Effects of the British Laws—Important Facts for Commercial Men to Consider.

From Our Special Correspondent.

LONDON, Thursday, Feb. 3, 1870.

Amongst the witnesses who were examined before the Parliamentary Committee of 1847, on the Navigation laws, was Mr. JOHN MACGREGOR, one of the Secretaries of the Board of Trade, well known as a writer upon subjects connected with commerce. Mr. MACGREGOR's explanation of the origin of the American Navigation laws is substantially as follows:

After the independence of the United States was established, Mr. ADAMS was sent upon a mission to this country, in order to represent their willingness to enter into a commercial treaty, and he proposed that the United Kingdom, including the British West Indies, and the North American Colonies, and the Independent States of North America, which had been previously British provinces, should be put as nearly as possible upon the same footing in their direct commercial and maritime relations as they were previously to their independence. The Americans, through Mr. ADAMS, having at that time proposed to give to the British the same advantages and privileges in their ports which British subjects had enjoyed previously to the American revolution, demanding in return that Great Britain should place the ports of the United States and the ports of the British West Indies, and also the ports of the British North American Colonies, upon a reciprocal footing of navigation and trade. Mr. PITT adopted the views expressed by Mr. ADAMS and prepared a bill, which was brought before Parliament early in March, 1783. Mr. PITT having gone out of office with the Shelburne Ministry on the 2d of April, the bill was defeated in May, under the Portland Ministry, who refused to make any treaty or commercial arrangement whatever with the United States, and for some time the ships and even the productions of the States were excluded from the British West Indies. In consequence of this treatment the United States, after some delay, adopted most, but not all, of the then existing British Navigation laws. The American law was enacted as a retaliatory measure, when other measures had failed, and from the reports in Congress upon the subject, it would appear that the Americans at that period deplored that their offers had been rejected. The law passed in 1792-3 was altered in 1817 so as to be almost word for word a counterpart of the British Navigation law of that day, and which has since been partially modified. Mr. PITT, in bringing forward his bill, and in the negotiations with Mr. ADAMS, dwelt especially on resuming old commercial relations between the United States and the remaining British possessions, putting them on the same footing of navigation as they were previously to the Independence, "I speak of navigation, not of duties; of the ships, not the commodities," said Mr. MACGREGOR. The Government of the United States did not enter seriously into the consideration of the question of adopting the British Navigation act until the letter of Mr. ADAMS to Mr. J. LAY, dated London, 21st October, 1785, was received by the President, General WASHINGTON. That letter alludes to the failure of his negotiations, which had proceeded so favorably during the period that Mr. PITT was Chancellor of the Exchequer. The American law was undoubtedly a retaliatory act, because for several years they refrained from passing a Navigation act, after it was known that the proposal made to the British Government, would not be adopted. The President most unwillingly concurred in the propriety of bringing it forward. One effect of the British Navigation law was to force Americans to build their ships in America. "Does not the sixteenth clause of the eighth and ninth Victoria, the British Navigation law, provide that no ship shall be admitted to be a ship of any particular country, unless she be of the build of such country, and owned, manned and commanded under the conditions contained in that clause?" was asked of the witness. "Certainly; that sixteenth clause is a repetition of the article which has always existed in the British Navigation law." To further quote: "If there were then no Navigation law in the United States, the Navigation law of Great Britain would have provided one with respect to ships of the United States, so far as intercourse between the United States and England is concerned." "Certainly, if there were no treaty to the contrary." "An American ship, manned by Englishmen, would not be admissable into a British port, according to our Navigation law." "An American ship would only be admitted into a British port if being constructed, owned and manned, according to the sixteenth clause of the British Navigation act, and under no other condition." "An American ship must, then, be built in America." "Yes, or condemned, or taken as a prize from the enemy."

It plainly appears, by the above evidence, that the law limiting American registry to ships built in America, a law which is now the great impediment in the way of American maritime enterprise, was forced upon us by the British Navigation laws, with the express purpose of limiting the number of American ships, and lessening American competition with British ships, by confining American tonnage to ships built in America. If we could not have built ships in America, or if we could only have built ships at prices forty or fifty per cent. above the cost of building British ships, the whole of the trade between the United States and Great Britain would necessarily have been carried on in British ships, and the purpose of the sixteenth clause of the British Navigation act would have been achieved. The object of checking the growth of American tonnage which the British act failed to effect, has been thoroughly accomplished by our own invoice policy. The adherence of the United States to the restrictive Registry law, which had been forced upon her by the selfish policy of Great Britain, and which limits American registry to vessels built in America, is now serving the very purpose for which it was first dictated to us by Great Britain. It has crippled our merchant marine, and destroyed the ability of our shipowners to compete for the foreign carrying of the United States and other countries; it has transferred the whole of the valuable carrying trade between the United States and Great Britain to British shipowners, and now, years after, it has been abandoned by Great Britain, and with its baleful effects upon American navigation visible in all the great commercial ports of the world, we still cling to it with an obstinacy which nearly approaches fatalism. The Registry act of the United States has, from 1847 down to the present hour, done more harm to the shipping interests of the United States, and more good to the shipping interests of Great Britain than all that her legislation, hostile as it was to us and favorable as it was intended to be to her own people, had been able to accomplish from 1782 down to 1847. This fact is well understood over here, and British legislators and British shipowners are amazed and delighted with the extraordinary fatuity which impels the United States to adhere to a policy which is rapidly and surely reducing her mercantile navy, and relieving British shipowners from American competition. But to return to the Parliamentary Committee and Mr. MACGREGOR's examination. He is asked—

"As a rule, a foreign built ship cannot be registered as a British merchant vessel?" "No."

"Does the preventing foreign-built ships from being registered as British merchant vessels tend to increase or diminish the extent of our national merchant shipping?" "I should say that the restriction limits the legal or registered number and tonnage of British merchant ships."

"Does not the preamble of our Navigation law describe it as a law for the encouragement of British shipping and navigation." "Yes."

"Is it not generally understood to be the purpose of the Navigation law to increase the amount of our national merchant shipping, and to cause us to have a greater number of merchant ships than we otherwise would have?" "That was the policy and that is the spirit of the existing Navigation law."

"How do you reconcile the restriction upon the registration of ships in our merchant service with the policy of making the tonnage of our merchant shipping larger than it otherwise would be if left free?" "I cannot reconcile the limitation which it may occasion to the number and tonnage of registered British ships, with either the policy or the spirit of the Navigation act."

"Is it your opinion that the effect of the Navigation law has been to increase the English commercial shipping?" "Not the effect has not been to increase the number of British ships."

"Do you believe that if foreign ships had been allowed to compete fairly with English-built ships, that competition would have had the effect of improving the build of English ships, and lowering the expense, and increasing the number of English-built ships?" "Yes; I am of opinion that competition would improve the naval construction of ships, and would enable us to build ships at a cheaper rate, and I believe that those combinations would enable us to increase the number of our ships and extend our carrying trade."

"The Registry act says, 'that no ship or vessel, registered or having been registered, shall be deemed to be duly registered under this act, unless she shall wholly belong and continue to wholly to belong to Her Majesty's subjects.' Do you think that preventing foreign capital from being invested in British ships has a tendency to increase and extend our national merchant shipping?" "No, I am not of opinion that it has."

"Do you know whether British capital is employed directly or indirectly in foreign merchant shipping?" "Yes, I do; it is employed extensively."

"Do you think that the law, by preventing the registration of foreign-built ships, has a tendency to cause English capital to be employed in foreign ships?" "Yes, I know that it has."

"Does such effect tend to increase our national commercial shipping?" "Certainly not."

"Is it, then, consistent with the professed object and policy of the Navigation law?" "No, it is not."

"To enable the British shipowner to compete with the foreign shipowner, would it not, in your opinion, be necessary to relax the act for the registration of British ships?" "I consider that every relaxation and every restriction you take off as regards the construction and navigation of British ships must tend to enable British ships to enter into that competition more favorably than they could do under any system of restriction."

I could fill a dozen columns of the TIMES with valuable evidence on the working of the British Navigation laws, given by Mr. MACGREGOR and by Mr. SHAW LEFEVRE. But the length of my letter warns me to pull up. I have endeavored to confine my extracts to those parts of the subject which especially apply to the present situation of shipping in the United States. Many of the points which had to be considered by the Parliamentary Committee—for example, the question of admitting foreign ships into the general carrying trade of the country—have already been settled in the affirmative by the United States. In fact, the only important principle to which we have adhered after it has been discarded and condemned by all the maritime nations of Europe, is found in our limited Registry act.

Mr. MACGREGOR's opinion of the evil effect of the British act on the shipping interests of England is fully sustained by the calamitous results which the American act (modeled upon the British act) has wrought upon the shipping interests of America. As Mr. MACGREGOR correctly states, a law which limits the number and tonnage of a country to ships of a particular build is opposed to both the spirit and policy of laws which were professedly enacted "for the encouragement of shipping and navigation."

It is a notorious fact that the American Registry law does not encourage "American shipping and navigation," but that it does exactly the reverse; it destroys that which it professes to foster and protect. It has already driven our carrying trade into foreign ships, and it is now forcing our citizens either to give up the profits of shipowning, or to carry on their business under a foreign flag. The Courts of this kingdom having decided that foreigners may hold shares in British shipping companies, there is now no legal impediment in the way of any American capitalist who may desire to invest his money in a British steamship company. New-York capital is already invested in more than one of the prosperous Liverpool companies, and more will follow in the same channel if the existing condition of things is permitted to continue. At present it is the only course open to American citizens who wish to participate in the profits of the carrying trade between the United States and England, and who are willing to carry on the business with their own money, and without aid from the United States Treasury. The United States Registry act is the sole living representative of the old Navigation laws of Europe and America. If in plain view of its destructive effect upon American shipping and navigation interests, the act is to remain upon our statute books, I beg most humbly to suggest to our national lawmakers at Washington the justice and propriety of prefacing it with a new preamble which shall truly set forth its proved practical working. Let it be entitled—"An act for the limitation and suppression of American shipping and navigation, and for the encouragement and increase of British shipping and navigation."

Mortality in the Council—The Death of the Marquis d'Argy—Archbishop Manning and the Pope—Doings in the Council—A New Saint—The Season.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ROME, Thursday, Feb. 3, 1870.

The mortality among the members of the Council has become so great that the question has been asked whether it has not engendered at Rome a sort of epidemic. Ten Fathers of the Assembly have closed their earthly career since the opening, a period of less than two months. The mortal remains of the Bishop of Vera Cruz, the Bishop of Terni and the Bishop of Poitiers were lying at the same time in different churches of Rome, waiting for the ceremonial of burial. Indeed, funeral pageants have divided with the Council the attention of the church functionaries and the general public. It was only a night or two ago that the young Marquis D'ARGY, Colonel of the Antibes Legion, was carried with all the honors to the grave. His sudden death at a period when life has most promise, excited lively regret among his comrades. But the funeral of the ex-Grand Duke of Tuscany, whose death took place here in Rome on the 28th of last month, was the occasion of a much more imposing demonstration. The Roman Court has all along insisted that the Italian revolution destroyed none of the rights of the family of LEOPOLD II., in Tuscany, and the late Duke has been treated here with all the honors of a reigning Prince. This ex-sovereign was the companion in exile of the Pope at Gaeta, and in 1857, when the Pontiff made a journey to Florence, there was nothing left undone by the Government of that time to prove its devotion to Rome and the interests of the Holy See. During the visit here of the ex-Grand Duke all past tokens of friendship have been more than repaid, and on the morning of Tuesday last the Pope with his own hand sprinkled holy water upon the bier of the deceased. The ceremonies were held in the great church of the Holy Apostles, a sanctuary which is the theatre of many pageants, and frequently visited by the Pope. The body was escorted to the church by the greater part of the Roman garrison, stated as high as seven thousand troops of all arms. Only the squad of French troops, called the Antibes Legion, was not present. Nearly all that is highest in office or distinguished in Roman social life, had a representation on this occasion, of which PIUS IX. had taken upon himself the direction. It is said that the Duke had expressed a wish that his remains might, without pomp, be quietly taken to his old home and family estate in Bohemia for burial. Another report is that he indicated a desire that his body should rest with the other Sovereigns of Tuscany in the stately mausoleum, known as that of the Medici, in Florence, in which the Italian branch of the Hapsburg family has enjoyed the right of sepulture for more than a century. This great monument, with its rich Mosaic decorations, you will remember, is connected with the Church of San Lorenzo, and was originally built, as the account goes, to receive the Holy Sepulchre, which some adventurer, in an age of fanaticism, promised to get possession of and bring into Italy—a project which, like so many others with the same object, we well know, was never carried out. If a wish should really be expressed for such burial, I do not doubt that the Tuscans, who were inclined to regard with good nature their old Governor, will, if they have the power, see it carried out.

But besides the deaths already referred to, the mortality among those of high social and official position has added several others to the list within a few days. The Minister of the King of Portugal at the Roman Court has died, and Roman families of the nobility have been put into mourning by the death of the Prince ORSINI and the Duke of GAETANI. So many proofs following close upon each other strengthen the belief, especially among foreigners, that Rome is not a healthy place to live in. There are certainly a hundred things that need to be done at once to improve the sanitary condition, but these are neglected, in an almost criminal manner, for the indulgence of priestly follies.

ARCHBISHOP MANNING.

Archbishop MANNING has made himself so busy in the Pope's cause as to provoke a good deal of criticism. The Italians see in the almost fanatical devotion of this recent convert the over-prompt action of an ambitious man striving for office. I notice in a journal of the Kingdom of Italy, which comes to my hand, such remarks as these: "Dr. MANNING makes himself observed at Rome by the excess of his zeal. He leaves far behind him the most fiery ultramontanes, and Italian prelates the most devoted to the dogma of the Pope's infallibility. Every day he pays court to the Pontif, trying to carry him along with his ideas of absolute power and infallibility; while the Bishops of other nations, elevated by wisdom, science and piety above their colleagues, regard these doctrines as compromising and dangerous for religion. The Archbishop tries to draw public attention upon himself in the religious ceremonies by exaggerated demonstrations, such as crossings and elevations of the hands and a multiplicity of genuflections, and by almost throwing himself flat upon his stomach before the altar. At the Agnus Dei he strikes upon his breast as if he would break it in; and in the street he affects the most imposing attitudes, distributing benedictions at every corner, and offering his archiepiscopal ring to be kissed by women. He assures all who listen to him that he alone possesses the power to bring England back into the bosom of the Church. But for this, he adds, it is necessary that the successor of PIUS IX. should be an Englishman, or, in a word, himself. The British empire he promises to bring along with him, and with it the whole English-speaking race. That accomplished, it would not be a great while before every form of sectarianism, Mahometanism and Buddhism would have their lights put out." Such, according to the writer, is the high bid made by the English prelate for the gratification of his ambition.

DOINGS IN THE COUNCIL.

The battle of petitions goes on, and the Pope seems to be in a fair way to be got into an embarrassing position. One party is praying PIUS IX. to be infallible, and the other party is praying him not to be, and it is said that the Holy Father, to save himself, has already taken a position of neutrality. Many now hardly regard this question as a serious one, but a fair subject for joke. If the Council should become the object of general ridicule, it will put itself on the level of the one attempted at Naples, and it would have done better not to come together.

In the Council there is a great deal of talk, but as yet no conclusions. We have waited a good while for the promised meeting at which the first decree is to be published. If there be a grain of truth in all that is said, the Council is becoming a scene of discussions, if not of wrangling, and it is assuming the character of a political caucus. The presence of so many men, of great influence in their sphere, laboring for ends not greatly beneficial to society, does not make a very favorable impression even here in Rome. Rigged out in their expensive finery, the question is often asked, is their object to lay plans to relieve human suffering and dispel ignorance, or only to invent a new scheme for preserving a little longer an unjust influence over the minds of men. Would not those 800 men be able to do quite as much good as common school teachers in the various countries from which they come?

A NEW SAINT.

A few days ago, the Pope made a visit to the College of the United States, on the occasion of the publishing of a decree beatifying and canonizing a new saint by the name of GIOVANNI AUCINA. This priest in life was connected with the Church and Convent of the Visitation of the Virgin, since become the locale in which the American College is lodged. His Holiness came in state, accompanied by the officers of his antichamber, and was received by Cardinal BARNABA, the Protector of the college, and a great number of Archbishops and Bishops of the United States and other countries, with the rector and the students of the institution. Then took place the ceremonies of the occasion, with the Pope on his throne and Cardinals PATRIZI and CAPALTI by his side, followed by kissing of feet and addresses to the Pope, and a reply from His Holiness and the proclamation of the decree.

THE SEASON.

A wave of cold has swept over all Italy, and the flat country of the Campagna has not escaped from its disagreeable effects. The fountains in the city have been frozen, and strangers making their first visit have received a different impression of this climate than they were prepared for. But a frigid state of the atmosphere is rarely of long continuance; although sometimes snow has lingered upon the summit of the Alban Mount until the beginning of April. In a week or two from this lizards will be flitting about on the southern side of every old wall, and delicate flowers begin to bloom among the ruins. A tender green will spring up all over the open country, and the atmosphere will assume that quality of genial calm which makes movement in the open air here so agreeable.

The Earthquake in San Francisco—Many Persons Frightened, but Nobody Hurt.

From the San Francisco Bulletin, Feb. 8.

There was a very lively and disagreeably suggestive shock of earthquake yesterday, which, according to the observation of THOMAS TENNENT, occurred at 12 minutes and 22 seconds past 12 M., with a duration of seven seconds, and a direction of southeast and northwest. It was sufficient to cause a general panic, but no damage was done to buildings, either public or private, so far as we could ascertain at the time of going to press.

The excitement in the City Hall, which was thronged with people, was intense, and a general stampede was made for the doors, as public confidence in the stability of that structure is not very strong. In the Police Court the examination of a gambling case was about commencing. Lawyers, officers and prisoners started for the door, but Judge SAWYER called out, "It is over; stop these men!" The Bailiff obeyed, and shut the door. In a few minutes there were not many people remaining in the Hall, and its vicinity was thronged. The prisoners in the basement were in a tight place, and felt more than ever the value of liberty.

At the hotels in the city the consternation was great. There was a universal stampede for the outside. Ladies and children screamed, and many of the former fainted, through fear and terror. Every street was black with people before the shock had fairly ceased.

At the Washington-street Baptist Church there was a large congregation in attendance on funeral ceremonies. There was the silence of the tomb, and the choir had just struck up "The Rock of Ages," when the earth lifted and trembled. All knew instantly what was at hand. The pastor and congregation were seized with the impulse to run, and a rush was made for the door. Four or five ladies fainted and fell down in the aisles; others screamed and called for help. Several teams in front of the church ran away. Some of the ladies were put in carriages and conveyed home in an unconscious state. Fortunately no one was seriously injured.

Immediately after earth's trembling had subsided, the streets presented an interesting panorama. The man who was not frightened—but who still trembled from fear—could be seen talking and making gestures. Then there was the man who was sure no damage had been done, almost dislocating his neck to look at the upper stories of tall buildings and straining his eyes to find a shattered pane of glass. To him every little crevice appeared double its real size, and every other building seemed out of plumb. A buxom matron of about 45 Summers was wending her way along Battery-street, near Washington, when the shock commenced, and she was perfectly demoralized for the time being. Contrary to the general estimate of maternal affection, she deposited her cherub on the curbstone and started off on a keen run. She subsequently remembered that she had left something behind, and returned for the babe.

It was fortunate that the shock occurred about the time for recess, so that many of the school children were playing in the yards. In the schools which were in session at the time, the teachers generally were cool and self-possessed, keeping children under control. At the Girls' High School, on Buah-street, near Stockton, the shock was sensibly felt, and a little plastering fell from the walls, but the young ladies did not seem much disconcerted. The school was dismissed after the vibrations ceased. At the branch of the High School and the Training School in the Jewish Synagogue, on Sutter-street, quite a panic occurred, and the shock is said to have been very vigorous. Several of the misses fainted, but no one was injured. In the Denman Grammar School building, the shock was quite severe, but no panic occurred. The teachers quietly took their stations at the doors, and after a few minutes the scholars were dismissed for the day. There are 600 young ladies attending the Rincon Girls' Grammar School, and we learn from Mr. KNOWLTON, Principal, that not one left her seat until the school was dismissed. The waters of the Bay showed no unusual commotion. The people around the wharves seemed little frightened, and evidently felt comparatively secure in their location. The Custom House was not deserted, as fast as could be ascertained from a brief examination, but the occupants of the building made no delay in getting into the street. The old Merchants' Exchange had a crack or two in the old previous widened a little, but not enough to accomplish any harm. The United States District Court was in session at the time of the shock, and Judge HOFFMAN did not offer to adjourn it. Some of the spectators, however, suddenly had business on the street, which required their immediate attention. In the entry of the Bank of British North America, a woman leant against a wall perfectly paralyzed with fear, and by way of shutting out the danger, ostrich-like, she drew her shawl over her head and awaited the coming of the enemy.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Elements of Solvency in Life Insurance.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The editorial in your issue of the 26th ult., on "The New Insurance Superintendent and What he Should Be," was a timely one, and evidently the handiwork of one who has given the matter study. The conclusion reached was undoubtedly correct, viz.: That the Insurance Department should be placed under the care of an expert. The use of the word expert is correct, but to many, if not most minds, it conveys a narrower meaning than was, I presume, intended by the writer. To many it has signified simply an actuary, or mathematical expert in the details of the business; whereas, there is a much higher order of talent implied in the full meaning of the word. It means one so thoroughly understanding the subject that he can not only administer existing laws, but point out necessary changes. Under our present laws the Superintendent's most important duty is to enforce the provision which requires each company to keep on hand a certain amount of reserve, or a sinking fund against its future liabilities. Unfortunately the law seems to regard this as solely a matter of mathematical calculation; the companies are obliged to report to him annually the condition of their affairs and the amounts and kinds of their assets and liabilities. By far the largest liability is that of the sinking fund. The calculation of this reserve, or "valuation of policies," is made by a formula set forth in the law, in the following language:

"For valuing registered life and other policies under chapter 708 of the laws of 1867, the rate of interest assumed shall be four and a half per cent. per annum, and the rate of mortality shall be established by the American Experience Table, which table shall show the expectation of life, and the numbers of living and dying at each age from ten to twenty-five out of one hundred thousand persons living at age ten, are as stated in the schedule hereto annexed."

In accordance with this provision a valuation is made by the companies each year, and, being merely a mathematical operation by fixed rates, the accountants of the Department easily verify it from their records. If by this measure it is found that a company's assets are larger than its liabilities, it is declared to have a surplus by the amount of the difference. If, however, the assets are found to be smaller, a deficiency is declared, and the company is called upon to make it good or terminate its career. Thus, under existing law, the quality of assets, and the questions in regard to what are not assets are the momentous ones. In other words, if a company complies with the letter of the law, and keeps the legal standard reserve, it is beyond the reach of the Superintendent's power, however inadequate such reserve may be to the real character of the risks on its books. That the law in this respect needs amendment is obvious. Suppose two companies, A and B, to have each obtained the same number and kind of policies, with other conditions of ages and length of payment alike. Company A is managed conservatively, taking none but good risks, and its rate of mortality is consequently low, while Company B is loosely conducted, accepting inferior risks at ordinary prices, with what is sure to be eventually an excessive rate of mortality. Yet the Superintendent "values the lives" in the companies solely upon the data of the ages of their insured, and declares each to have a surplus, and in effect to be perfectly and equally secure and reliable, while the real fact may be that Company B is on the high road to insolvency.

No one conversant with the business, doubts the possibility of the existence of these great differences between companies. What if this presumption that insured lives are as good as the average of the world at large, is an incorrect one as applied to the business of any or all of our companies. That there is abundant reason for such a supposition I have in former communications pointed out. Without being an alarmist, I incline to the opinion that by the methods of selecting lives most in vogue, the lives of those insured and who remain insured will not average as long as the world at large outside. The law, in effect, presumes that the medical examinations and "forms of applications" required to be gone through with by persons seeking insurance, will not only serve to weed out the poor risks, but also presumes that they will serve to get the good and the best. This, too, in the face of the evident fact that the very idea of insurance appeals most effectively to those whose lives are in the greatest danger, either from internal disease or accident from without, so that of those who can be accepted the weaker ones will apply in the greatest number, and when their policies are once obtained, will keep them up the most carefully. In confirmation of this I am assured by competent persons that the experience of insured lives reveals the startling fact that from the age of 45 upwards the average life of selected sound insured lives falls short of that set forth in the famous Carlisle table, in which the sick and the dying, as well as the sound, are included. This plainly arises from the fact that the companies get and retain too many of the early dying-kind and too few of those capable of attaining old age.

Mr. SANFORD, late Commissioner of Insurance in Massachusetts, asserts that "the effect of selection is found by the most recent and reliable investigations to have nearly ceased, for all practical purposes, after five years. In other words, that the average quality of the lives insured deteriorates year after year, until it reaches the average of all lives sick and well, which is the case, in five years from the date of insurance, and after that time the residuum goes on depreciating. Two reasons can be assigned for this: 1. A want of skill or care in the selection, inferior risks being accepted on the ground of their apparent soundness at the time of application, without due care in ascertaining their actual condition or due regard to the probable length of time during which they will remain sound. 2. The inferior lives among those accepted are the last to give up their polices. They hold fast to them, as valuable assets which they cannot surely replace; while the best, always confident of their health and ability to be again insured at any time, drop them on slight provocation. For these reasons, even if the lives averaged good when taken, it does not at all follow that they will remain so. This demonstrates the faultiness of a standard of valuation, which assumes, as our law does, that insured lives are not only as good as the average, but that they will continue so.

Assets are only evidences of security when they exist in proper proportion to the risk. If the lives insured are below the standard—assumed, if the risks or liabilities are greater than were so estimated for—then assets are inadequate, no matter what a mathematical calculation on such assumed standard may show. Our present laws do not enable the Superintendent to say that such is not the case. They check many of the worst forms of speculation, and oblige many companies to keep on hand more reserves than they otherwise would, but changes are necessary both in the law and the execution of it before the records of the Department can show as they ought the real condition of every company.

General Badeau Explains.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In the editorial columns of the TIMES of Friday occurs the following passage:

"General BADEAU, in his article on 'Our Relations with England,' in a monthly magazine, seems to have fallen into an extraordinary mistake. He adopts a quotation, from what source we are not informed, which runs thus: 'The Spectator, whose circulation is among the class which was most unfriendly to America during the war, and whose prejudices were faithfully represented by the London Times and the Saturday Review,' &c. If this is meant to convey the impression that the Spectator was ever unfriendly to America, or was on the same side as the other journals named, a great injustice is done," &c.

Will you do me the favor to state that in the article mentioned, I had already given the same quotation entire, and announced that it was taken from a letter by THOMAS HUGHES in the New-York Tribune? The quotation as previously given by me in the same article reads thus: "Of the two leading and most influential weeklies, the Spectator fought for you at the risk of absolute ruin, for its circulation lay chiefly among the very class," &c. In common with the TIMES and all loyal Americans, I appreciate very fully the noble stand taken by the Spectator.

Change in the New-York Central Railroad—Resignation of Mr. Torrance.

Mr. DANIEL TORRANCE, well known for several years past as Vice-President of the New-York Central Railroad, has resigned that position, and retires once more to private life. He was called into service by Commodore VANDERBILT, when the latter assumed control of the road, and has won unqualified praise for the thoroughness and efficiency of his management. Fearless and independent in his actions, at all times, he administered the affairs of his office in a manner that brought credit upon himself, and profit to the corporation. Previous to his connection with Central, Mr. TORRANCE was engaged, for several years, in the direction of an European line of steamers, with marked distinction for his ability. No selection of a successor has yet been made by the Commodore, but it is whispered in well-informed circles that the younger son of the Railway King is held in view for the position. However that may be, it will not be an easy matter to readily fill Mr. TORRANCE's chair.

The $150,000 Bank Robbery at Hillsboro, Ohio.

From the Hillsboro (Ohio) News, Feb. 24.

One of the most daring, extensive and successful robberies ever committed in this State, if not surpassing all others in the amount of property stolen, was perpetrated in this place on Wednesday night of last week. The private banking house of WM. SCOTT, Esq., situated in the very centre of town, only a few steps from Main-street, was entered some time between 12 and 2 o'clock, his safe blown open with powder, and all its contents abstracted, amounting in money, United States and State bonds, county turnpike bonds, railroad and other stocks, and individual promissory notes to over $150,000.

The robbers affected their entrance by prying open the front door with a crowbar, bursting off the lock. The safe stood in a recess under a stairway, unprotected by any outer door. A hole was punched through the front door of the safe, just under the lock, and a charge of powder inserted. The explosion wrenched the lock completely off, and shattered the whole concrete lining of the door. One end of the small iron box which contained the valuables was pried off, apparently with a chisel, and the coveted prize was in the hands of the daring robbers, who, it may be supposed, lost no time in making their escape with their ill-gotten plunder. They left behind the chisels, crowbar and sledge hammer they had used, which they had previously stolen from the blacksmith shop of W. & S. LEMON.

The robbery was first discovered next morning about daylight, by Mr. N. W. CHANEY, Express Agent, who, on his way to the office, observed Mr. SCOTT's front door open, and, looking in, saw the floor strewed with papers and the débris of the explosion. Mr. CHANEY's residence is only one door north of Mr. SCOTT's banking house, and during the night both he and his wife heard footsteps frequently passing and repassing on the street, but did not suspect anything wrong. The explosion was also heard by them, and several other persons in the vicinity, who were awakened, and supposed it to be thunder.

There is no doubt that several parties were engaged in the robbery, and it is more than probable that some of them, at least, were well acquainted with Mr. SCOTT's premises, his habits and business. The principal operators may have been from Cincinnati or elsewhere, but it is generally believed they had accomplices residing here.

The following is a correct list of the bonds and other property stolen, as described by Mr. SCOTT:

United States five-twenties (registered)	$33,000
Ohio Union Loan bond	5,000
Turnpike bonds of Highland, Clinton and Brown counties, about	7,000
Hillsboro' National Bank stock	10,000
Certificates of deposit	3,400
Columbus Woolen Factory stock	3,000
Railroad stocks	4,900
Individual notes, about	80,000
Cash, about half in gold	500
Total	$151,500

Fortunately for Mr. SCOTT, the United States and Ohio bonds were registered and payable only to himself or order—not to bearer. A description of the bonds was at once telegraphed to the United States and State Treasurers, and the nearest depositories, so that he will not suffer by their loss. The bank stock, certificates of deposit and other stocks were also registered, and will be of no value to the robbers, and the same is, of course, true of the individual notes, which formed the bulk of the stolen property. Mr. SCOTT had a complete and careful register of all his notes, which will save him from any serious loss upon them. The payment of the turnpike bonds has also been stopped. It thus appears that, notwithstanding the large amount of property

AFFAIRS IN SPAIN.

Difficulties in the Cortes—A Duel in Prospect—Social Matters—Outrages in the Provinces—Porto Rico Reforms—Miscellaneous Legislation—The New Candidate.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MADRID, Monday, Feb. 7, 1870.

Since my last letter several events of interest have occurred in Spain. I give them to you exactly as they happened. The head of the Republican Party, M. FIGUERAS, having declared to the Cortes that the Federal Deputy GUITTEN had been assassinated by the order of Colonel LUQUE, the latter sent to M. FIGUERAS a letter, in which he begs him to carry the question before a Court of law, after having divested himself of his inviolate character as Deputy, as he offered to do in his speech to the Chambers, and he says further that, after the question shall have been decided by law, he will send him a hostile message.

M. FIGUERAS sent, in reply to Colonel LUQUE, a letter, in which he maintains his assertions, and announces his intention of bringing the question before a Court of law, of having it narrowly inquired into, and, after its decision, of accepting Colonel LUQUE'S challenge.

A Republican ex-Deputy, M. PAUL ANGULO, now a refugee in Switzerland, has sent to M. FIGUERAS, from Lausanne, a telegraphic dispatch, in which he asserts that the Deputy GUITTEN was assassinated by the order of Colonel LUQUE, and that it is not of M. FIGUERAS, but of him, (M. ANGULO,) that Colonel LUQUE ought to demand satisfaction for this serious, but unhappily true, accusation. You may easily conceive that the Republicans and the officers of the army are at daggers drawn. If the duel takes place, it will be followed by several others, and General PRIM is exerting his utmost efforts to prevent this meeting, which would have the most serious consequences, considering the present agitated state of the public mind.

In answer to an interpellation on the subject of Spain and the South American Republics, the Minister of Foreign Affairs said that, owing to the good offices of the United States Government, which had so readily served as mediator between those States and Spain, there was good ground for hoping that friendly relations would soon be renewed and that peace would be made. Before this letter reaches you peace will doubtless be signed. The United States have rendered a most important service to all the Governments concerned, which would have been reconciled with difficulty but for their mediation.

SOCIAL MATTERS.

The social condition of Spain is not in any way ameliorated. At Valencia and in the province of Cordova two atrocious crimes have just been committed which have spread consternation among the inhabitants. At Alzamova, near Valencia, a land proprietor, who inhabited a country house with a mill attached, had just received £260, and was, with his wife and his sister-in-law, counting out this sum, when several armed men broke into the house, murdered them all three and made off with the money. The Police are on the track of the murderers, but have failed to discover them as yet. Near Cordova, a town of 60,000 inhabitants, at the village of Palenciana, the Mayor received a visit at 2 o'clock in the morning from five armed men, disguised as gendarmes. In order that the door should be opened by the Mayor himself, they told him that they needed his aid and his presence to enter the dwelling of one of the neighbors, where was concealed a criminal they wanted to apprehend. The Mayor, without the slightest suspicion, accompanied them to the place they had indicated; but, naturally, they did not find the criminal. They then led the Mayor into the house of the richest proprietor in the village, M. ORELLANA, and they gave injunctions to the servants not to speak a word under pain of immediate death. They then shut up the Mayor, bound hand and foot and gagged, in a dark room, threatening him with death if he made a sound; sacked the house, tied two servants down in their beds with a sentinel over them, and, after having carried off everything that was of value, they made away, taking with them into the mountains M. ORELLANA, for whose ransom they ask £2,000 of his family. The Police have organized the strictest researches, but the robbers and M. ORELLANA have not yet been found.

The impunity with which crimes are committed in Spain gives fresh audacity to malefactors, and it is hardly to be wondered that such atrocities should be perpetrated with a frequency worthy of Calabria or Morocco.

PORTO RICO REFORMS.

The Minister of the Colonies had hoped that the projects concerning the constitutional reform of Porto Rico would be discussed to-day; but the Minister of Finances demanded that the Chamber should debate on the law concerning the new tax to be substituted for the Custom duties, themselves replaced by a law voted by the Cortes and abandoned by the Ministry, owing to the difficulty, not to say the impossibility, of its execution, I mean the personal tax. The newly projected law consists in leaving to the municipalities the care of fixing the tax deemed necessary on articles of food and and combustibles in order to pay their share of the tax fixed by the Department and the State.

MISCELLANEOUS LEGISLATION.

The municipalities complain that they have no means of providing for the paving and lighting of streets, for the night watches, and in short for all the public services they have to discharge.

M. BRUSSA is preparing for the colonies new projects of laws for the election of municipalities, of members of councils, and of deputies. I ought not to hide from you that the Unionist Liberals have refused to vote in favor of the projected laws concerning the reform of the Constitution of Porto Rico, because they do not settle the important question of slavery, and because, according to them, Porto Rico ought not to be assimilated to the mother country before the defeat of the Cuban insurgents admits of the same proceedings with regard to Cuba.

The Minister of the Interior is about to lay before the Cortes the project of law concerning the right of assemblies and associations, public order, the election of municipal councillors, of Deputies of the States General and of Sanitary Commissioners.

It is said M. RIVERO will reestablish the election in the districts or arrondissements, and not in the capitals, so as that electors shall not be put to the inconvenience of traveling in order to vote.

Out of twenty-eight elections five are in favor of the Republicans. The election of five Deputies will take place at Gerona, at Barcelona, at Catalauge, (Aragon,) at Orense, at Mandamedo and at Segovia. The Republicans have been victorious in the three first towns in all previous elections, and are nearly sure to triumph in these, which are fixed for the 3d of March.

THE NEW CANDIDATE.

The most important event is the proposed candidateship for the Spanish throne of Prince FREDERICK of Saxony, brother of the Duke of Genoa, and son of the King of Saxony. He is married to an Infanta of Portugal. By his mother he descends from the family of the Duke of PARMA; he is consequently a BOURBON. The Republicans do not consider this candidateship as likely to have any consequences; they seem to laugh at it. General PRIM, when questioned on this subject by the leaders of the Liberal Unionists, said in reply that nothing was as yet settled.

CUBA.

The Government has denied officially the rumor that it was carrying on negotiations with the United States for the sale of Cuba. The Spaniards are not inclined to give up at any price such an important colony. The Republican papers criticise somewhat severely the conduct of the Government, which is always announcing the suppression of the Cuban revolt, when facts contradict it.

Threatened Outrages on the Chinese in San Francisco.

From the San Francisco Bulletin, Feb. 19.

Vague rumors have been current for some time, which seem recently to have assumed more definite shape, that an extensive organization is going on in the city for the purpose of mobbing, murdering and exterminating the Chinese in our midst. It is reported that one association alone, having this object in view, numbers 2,000 members; that there are several such associations in the city, and that at a given signal, on or before St. Patrick's Day, a concerted movement is to be made to exterminate the Chinese. It is to be hoped, for the sake of humanity and civilization, that these rumors are entirely groundless, but the subject is one which may well claim the attention of our authorities and our citizens before it is too late. Although a mob of this character would commence operations against the Chinese, it would, of course, like that of New-York during the war, sack the city so far as it could acquire the power, making robbery and rapine its ulterior and principal object. That a few designing demagogues are engaged in urging wicked and ignorant men to deeds of violence seems highly probable. How far they will be able to succeed in their criminal course the next few weeks will determine.

Review of the Past Week.

There was no material change in the condition of the real estate market last week. Owners continue to cling to the old prices, while purchasers are still waiting for the long looked for decline. The result is exceeding caution on the part of all parties, and a general dullness in the market. Rents are unmistakably declined to a fall before the 1st of May, and have already begun somewhat to decline.

At the public sales of the Exchange considerable activity was displayed on Wednesday and Thursday, but the rest of the week was quite dull. The total amount of auction sales was $272,969, while the recorded transfers amounted to $1,555,188.

MR. SAMUEL SHIPPEN has sold two lots on Fifth avenue, between Sixty-second and Sixty-third streets, to a prominent real estate broker on Pine-street for $35,000 each, cash, for immediate improvement.

Mr. C. L. OGDENSH sold two lots on Ninth avenue, comprising 50.5 feet south of Sixty-second street, to THOMAS KIRCH, for $10,500 each, also for immediate improvement.

WILLIAM BUTLER, ELIZABETH WATSON, PETER BROWN, ELIZABETH TAILOR and CARLESLE BROWN, were brought up at the Essex Market Police Court yesterday, before Judge LEDWITH, charged with robbing JOSEPH HOWARD of $40 and a revolver, by means of the panel game. It appeared that on Saturday evening the prosecutor, who had previously been indulging in rather deep potations, was induced to enter a house of ill-fame, No. 217 Third-avenue, managed by the prisoners, who succeeded in robbing him of the amount stated, and then unceremoniously flung him into the street. The officers of the Eighteenth Precinct made a descent on the house, and recovered the money and revolver. The accused were committed.

A meeting was held by a number of German artizans of the Twenty-second Ward, at Unger's Hall, corner of Broadway and Forty-ninth-street, yesterday afternoon, Mr. F. A. When COOK handed it back, the complainant placed the money in his pocket without counting, subsequently discovering that there was $160 missing. The Magistrate did not consider the evidence very conclusive, yet remanded the prisoners for trial in default of $1,000 bail each.

Meeting of the Christian Commission.

A public meeting was held under the auspices of the American Christian Commission, at the Collegiate Reformed Church, corner of Fifth-avenue and Twenty-ninth-street, last evening. The attendance was not very large owing to the stormy weather. Rev. Dr. JAMES presided. It was announced that the object of the Association was to promote home evangelization by seeking to stimulate Christians to win personal efforts for the salvation of men. Rev. Dr. WILLIAM M. ADAMS spoke in regard to the necessity of increased efforts on the part of the laity in carrying out the work of evangelization. He said that there ought not to be any association outside of the Church that should stimulate that Church in the work of evangelization. He referred to an article in the January number of one of the London quarterlies, in which the writer insists that there is need of life and activity in the laity in administering the affairs of the Church. The laity are the constituency of the Church, and should be its very life. The Bible speaks of the laity as laborers of Christ. The way the Gospel was first propagated was by the missionary efforts of those who believed in it. He alluded to a word in the Hebrew version of the Gospel which corresponds to the English word talking, and said it was good and earnest Christian talking which was wanted at the present time. He believed in men going abroad and evangelizing wherever they went, by inspiring other minds with their own emotions. Self conviction is a great thing in the way of evangelization, as is shown by the early history of Christendom. He thought there was a great deal that passed under the name of religion which had very little in it. It is often the frozen policy of self interest, but contains very little gratude to Christ. Addresses were subsequently made by Rev. Dr. JOSEPH T. DURYEA, and others, after which the meeting adjourned.

Arrest of an Alleged Forger in Newark.

In February, 1869, CHRISTIAN TASCHE, a German, who had hitherto had a good standing in the community, was arrested, charged with forging the names of a number of well-known gentlemen of Newark. At that time he returned to Newark, and last evening, (just one year from the date of his first arrest,) he was again taken into custody by Officers SMITH and BECKER. He was captured in the attic of his own residence, No. 190 Newark-street.

Dedication of the Tabernacle M. E Church, Greenpoint.

The opening services in connection with the dedication of this place of worship took place yesterday morning. Bishop JAMES officiated, and the edifice was crowded in every part, and great interest was manifested in the proceedings. The building is situated in Union-avenue, at the head of Noble-street, and is constructed of brick, with brown-stone mouldings, and is 165 feet long and 85 feet wide. The interior presents a neat and elegant appearance, and is greatly admired. The walls are of white stone; the seats, wainscoting, mullions, pulpit, organ loft and gallery front are all constructed of chestnut wood, with black-walnut mouldings. The organ, which cost $3,000, is situated immediately behind the pulpit. The ground and gallery floors are covered with handsome carpets, and all the seats are furnished with red cushions. The ceiling is painted of a light blue color, and six emblems of a religious character, representing a crown and sceptre, dove, sacramental cup, anchor and Bible, the trinity and unity. The entire cost of the building does not exceed $30,000.

After reading of Scripture and prayer, Bishop JAMES preached the sermon, selecting his text from Ezra, vi., 16: "And the children of Israel, the priests and the Levites, and the rest of the children of the captivity, kept the dedication of this house of God with joy." He said that the above passage described the dedication of the Second Temple, and also the joyousness and festivity attendant thereto. As the Israelites had dedicated their house, so would this congregation dedicate theirs, and it would be said of them in the voice of God, "My house shall be called of all nations a house of prayer." The purport of the words was apparent when they referred to the house of God. The private dwelling was a place where intercourse with friends could be enjoyed, and security from all danger guaranteed, and so it would be with the house of God. When worshipping there, God's people would be communing with Him, and would be as safe in the hollow of His hands.

The Bishop, in his interesting and able discourse, remarked that the time had come when nearly every man and all nations recognized the potent influence of Christianity, and bowed to it. Alluding to the influence of the Press, he said that it might be made a blessing to the community if it only espoused the Word of God. The pulpit was the arena for the exposition of the most important and powerful themes which it was man's lot to hear in this world. The Bishop exhorted the congregation to prosper in the Divine favor, and look unto the coming of the Lord. He complimented them upon the structure they had reared for their worship, and hoped that they would in the end reap heavenly benedictions and blessings for the work that had been accomplished. At the close of the services $4,200 were subscribed for the purpose of paying off the floating debt, which amounted to $10,000.

In the evening Rev. Dr. DASHIELL, President of Dickinson College, preached in the new church.

Lecture on Temperance by Judge Daly.

Judge DALY lectured on the subject of "Temperance" last evening before the members of the Neptune Division of the Society, at their hall, No. 405 Grand-street. He said that the best argument to be adduced in favor of total abstinence was that derived from a reflection that in this great City there were thousands in a condition of absolute want, who were exposed to all the inclemencies of Winter, who experienced the promptings of hunger—and, also, that there were many others, who rolled in the lap of luxury and enjoyed all the blessings of life. And what was it that caused this difference? Probably a variety of causes, but intemperance contributed much to effect it. A study of human character and the composition of society revealed the fact that the great distinction between rich and poor, happy and unhappy, learned and unlearned, was to be traced to this evil. Seek out a man who is ignorant and uncultivated, and the chances are in favor of the assertion that he is a victim to intemperance, and that he has inherited it from his parents. The rich men cultivated the education of their children, and though it did not necessarily follow that they would remain sober and lead exemplary lives, it was generally the case that the ignorant man had for his parents persons who could not appreciate the interests of education, who were addicted to passions which necessitated poverty, and who terminated their lives without accomplishing, perhaps instead injuring, the general purposes of humanity. It was a saddening reflection that one of these latter classes, made after His own image, should survive a whole lifetime and contribute nothing towards the elevation of his race. The great mass of men, who were created for noble and God-ordained purposes, live as much as possible like the brute creation. They seem to ignore the Divine object in their formation and pervert the directions received from him in its attainment. It has now become an established principle that in the celebration of great events, and almost in the performance of the ordinary contracts of life, the use of intoxicating liquors was unavoidable. The "cup" was ever present; it was passed from lip to lip. What was intended to be an intellectual feast resolves itself into a rum-gathering, and not unfrequently men whose positions in society should make them respectable leave in a degrading condition of intoxication. Judge DALY here adverted at length to the evils incidental to intemperance, and reverted to the recent murder in Brooklyn as a fearful instance of its effects. He often expressed his surprise that, considering the cause temperance were so exceedingly few, considering the apparent relief it held out, and also that its adoption did not tend in any degree to deprive men of any of the comforts of life. The evil still existed to a fearful extent—fortunes and souls were lost in the rum shop—children and wives continued to suffer the pangs of poverty, and this great destroyer of mankind and humanity still struggled for the mastery. This was a glorious contest for good men to engage in; it was one that appealed with irresistible force to parents especially, and which they should not be slow to assist in. The lecturer concluded by impressing upon those present who had not taken the pledge the necessity of doing so immediately, and strengthening tho power of the temperance leaders.

Professor NESBITT also spoke on the subject, indorsing the views of Judge DALY.

Probable Suicide of a Monomaniac.

A German named JOHN MONTENS, boarding with a friend, JOHN MON MARTIN, at No. 174 Elizabeth-street, New-York, left his home on Saturday afternoon, under circumstances which render it almost certain that he committed suicide by drowning himself. MONTENS was a bachelor, 44 years of age, and followed the occupation of a tailor. About five years since a small fortune fell to him from friends in Germany. His friend, Mr. MARTIN, advised him to get married and settle down, but he declined to enter into the bonds of matrimony, fearing that his family might come to want; and since that time has frequently said that he would make away with himself in the event of pecuniary distress. MONTENS lived a fast life as long as the money bequeathed to him lasted, after which he supported himself by working at his trade. About twelve weeks since MONTENS was thrown out of work on account of the dullness of the times, and since that time the old suicide mania appeared to occupy his mind. On Saturday night, when Mr. MARTIN returned to his home, he found a letter in his room from MONTENS, in which the latter said he was tired of life and should make away with himself. He also left his gold watch for Mr. MARTIN'S little boy, for whom he stood god-father. During yesterday Mr. MARTIN was engaged in endeavoring to gain intelligence of his friend. He learned that MONTENS went on board of a Hoboken ferry boat, at the foot of Barclay-street, at 5 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and could gain no intelligence of him in Jersey City, where he was in the habit of visiting. He has no doubt that MONTENS has carried his threat into execution, and thinks that while crossing the ferry he quietly dropped off of the stern of the boat unobserved.

MONTENS was about five feet eight inches in height, of stout build, and his right arm was four inches shorter than his left one.

Next Wedeesday being Ash-Wednesday, the first day of Lent, the regulations for the guidance of the Roman Catholics during that season were announced in most of their churches yesterday. The use of flesh meat is prohibited at any time during the first week. During the remaining weeks flesh meat is allowed at dinner only on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, and at the three meals on Sundays. No flesh meat is allowed on the last Thursday in Lent, known as Holy Thursday. All persons over 7 and under 21 years of age are bound to abstain, and all over the latter age and under 60, are bound to fast on the days specified on one meal and a collation. At the collation, eggs, butter or cheese may be used. Laboring men and servant girls, or those whose daily duties are of an arduous nature, are exempted from fasting on one meal and a collation. Besides the latter classes, women in delicate health, nursing children, the sick, and those suffering from the infirmities of old age, are relieved from the lenten restrictions.

Stormy Weather—Rain, Hail and Snow.

Towards sunrise yesterday morning the wind changed from the northwest to the northeast. The sky was overcast with heavy clouds throughout the day. Small hail commenced to fall about 12:30 P. M. Either rain, small hail or a mist fell under the stormy, heavy wind from 3 o'clock in the afternoon to 9:40 P. M., and snow till a late hour at night. The rain froze as it fell, rendering the sidewalks exceedingly slippery and dangerous. The mercury in the thermometer stood at 30° at 7 A. M., 33° at noon, 32° at 3 and 11 P. M. The elevation of the mercury in the barometer at 7 A. M. was 29.84 inches; at 3 P. M., 29.63; at 11 P. M., 29.47. Depth of rain and melted hail .04 inch.

The Central Park meterological report for last week sets forth the following facts and figures: Barometer—Mean, 29.712 inches; maximum at 7 A. M. Feb. 20, 30.036 inches; minimum at 3 A. M. Feb. 24, 29.478 inches; range, .558 inch. Thermometer—Mean, 25.8 degrees; maximum at 3 P. M. Feb. 20, 45.5 degrees; minimum at 4 A. M. Feb. 22, 9.5 degrees; range, 36 degrees. Feb. 20, rain from 5 P. The Flushing Contested Election.

A week ago last Saturday the examination of NIMMO, the Village Clerk of Flushing, before Justices PARCELLS and MCKENNA, of Newtown, was closed, and the Court was adjourned, to meet at the Town Hall, Flushing, on the following Tuesday, at which time the Justices announced that a decision would be given. At the latter time NIMMO appeared with counsel, and also a large number of persons interested in the result, but no Justices came. Wednesday, Thursday and Friday passed, but no Justices. On Saturday, without any previous notice to either NIMMO or counsel, the members of this roving tribunal arrived very unexpectedly at the Court room. The counsel for NIMMO, Hon. J. W. GREEN, Surrogate of Queens County, hearing that the Court was in session, attended, and moved for the decision of the Court. This the Court refused to give on account of the absence of NIMMO, and adjourned for one week.

Entertainment of the Arbeiter Union.

The German Workingmen's Union (Arbeiter Union) of this City held their third entertainment of the season at Munzinger's Hall, Nos. 147 and 149 West Thirty-second-street, last night. It was very well attended by the workingmen belonging to the association and their families. The first part of the programme was an address by Dr. ADOLPHUS DOUAI on rational education, in which he showed that it was the duty of workingmen to see to it that their children were getting the most perfect education in the public schools, becoming them as future citizens of this free country. The second part of the programme was as follows: Solo, sung by Mr. HERMAN HEYDE; recital, by Mr. H. MOSSINGER; solo sung by Mr. BENSEN; recital, by Mr. L. KRAUS; chorus, sung by the Social Reform Singing Society; recital, by Mr. F. TRIEST, and solo, sung by Mr. FR. DERRENBOURG. The third part of the programme also consisted of recitals, solo and chorus singing. The entertainment was attractive and a success.

Practical Education in the Evening Schools.

The meeting to promote the education of our self-supporting young men has already been briefly noticed, but since it has attracted the attention of so many leading men, and the subject is at this time of such great public interest, we lay before our readers a synopsis of the arguments advanced in favor of extending the practical instruction given in the Cooper Institute (with surpassing results) to the public evening schools. The over-crowded attendance at the Cooper Institute caused the Board of Education to establish the evening high school on the same plan, as a public necessity, and though only a few squares off, it has, in its fourth session, attracted several hundreds more than it could accommodate, and smaller schools in other parts of the City would draw equal numbers. Such schools are economical in the extreme, requiring no extra buildings, and the best instructors in the colleges and day schools being obtainable at very small salaries. The total cost of a school of a thousand men, with a corps of twenty instructors, is less than that of twenty policemen, while its effectiveness as a police measure merely, would be far greater. Moreover, practical education prevents pauperism. The public and private charities of this City already amount to more than the total cost of the public schools with their aggregate attendance of a quarter of a million scholars. The proportion of the annual expense of one scholar to that of one panper is as one to ten, and for every dollar that we spend on the useful instruction of the people, we will save ten from the support of paupers; ten that we would be forced to spend by every law of humanity, religion and social polity. But there is more than the mere saving of money here; for about twenty dollars per annum young men, whose services were before comparatively valueless, are made clerks, artizans, &c., worth from five to fifteen hundred dollars per annum. This is, indeed, only an indirect return to the State, but a close estimate will show that ten thousand industrious men will pay as the school tax, in the course of their whole lives, more than the cost of their few years' instruction; and no one can say where that they are actually to pay for; and why should youths who are forced to leave the day schools to earn a living be debarred from the advantages before open to them? Education is essential to make competent citizens—as jurors, forced to render verdict upon our fame, our fortunes and our lives; as voters, electing legislative, executive and judiciary, every power and safeguard of government.

Evening university schools for industrious young men are an essential department of our public school system, to equalize its benefits and increase its practical results. The time is fully come for establishing them; half of our great school houses are standing silent throughout the night, with their gates closed against thousands longing tor instruction, teachers are ready and competent, there is a scurplus of $736,000 saved by the financial ability of the new Board, large tax-payers and most cautious statesmen are in favor of the plan, and the people will consider as public benefactors those who secure to them the inestimable advantages of intelligence to think for themselves and practical knowledge to make them useful and independent citizens.

The Discovery of the Thatcher Comet—Letter from Sir John Herschel.

The accompanying letter to Professor A. E. THATCHER, of this City, now for the first time published, has reference to the comet discovered by him on April 4, 1861, near the twin star Gamma, in the constellation of Draco. Professor THATCHER has been the discoverer of a number of comets, and was the first discoverer of this one. The letter was addressed to Professor THATCHER by the great astronomor:

COLLINGWOOD, June 9, 1861.

SIR: I duly received your notice of the comet you discovered, which, after some time, became conspicuous enough here to be seen with the naked eye; and I beg leave to congratulate you on this result of your skill and diligence. I observe that the first discovery is attributed to you in the notice of the Astronomical Society. I hope it will be followed by many more instances of success in this and other lines of astronomical discovery.

Believe me, &c., &c., Sir, with much respect, your obedient servant,

J. L. W. HERSCHEL.

Labor Meetings Yesterday.

A large meeting of the tailors who work for clothing houses was held yesterday at the Teutonia Assembly Rooms, No. 158 Third-avenue, having for its object the devising of the best means to do away with the present noxious system of working at home, and also to persuade the employers of the necessity that exists for workshops.

Mr. BLISSERT and others addressed the meeting at considerable length, showing how injurious, mentally, morally and physically, it was to remain excluded from all society with man for a week day and then, in obedience to an unconquerable desire of nature for recreation, to have to seek the very place where he should not—that was, the barroom and kindred places.

The meeting was a very earnest one, and a determination was expressed to agitate this question to a successful issue.

A meeting of German tailors was held yesterday afternoon, at No. 10 Stanton-street, during which it was unanimously agreed that there should be work shops for the employes connected with all manufacturing houses.

The committee of the Tailors' Union assembled at No. 10 Stanton-street, last evening, to make out a report of the standing and resources of the Society. The report will be laid before a general meeting on Wednesday evening. The committee express great satisfaction at the manner in which the Union is flourishing.

At a meeting of pianoforte makers yesterday delegates reported that WEBER had agreed to give within five per cent. of the advance to demand, and that the men on strike would return to work there to-day. All the other leading houses, except STEINWAY'S and DECKER'S, have expressed a willingness to give this same rate, so that their workmen will also return. Unless DECKER gives the advance to-day the men in his employ have stated that they will strike at once.

The Mormons in Brooklyn, E. D.

The Mormons held their usual Sunday afternoon meeting at No. 145 Grand-street. The exercises were commenced by singing and praying, after which addresses were made by Messrs. BUNFROST and MERRILL, lately from Utah. In a conversation had with Brother JACKSON, it appears the late demonstration against the Mormon element at Freeport was instigated by a Methodist congregation, near whom the disciples of BRIGHAM YOUNG had determined to preach the doctrine of Christ as revealed to them, and claim the right to construe passage in the Bible to suit their particular doctrine. All are invited to come and listen. None are compelled; therefore they do not acknowledge the right of the Freeport inhabitants to interfere with them in their manner of worship. Bishop BENTON, it is understood, fully intended to continue their service at Freeport yesterday. The evening service was held at 7 o'clock, at which Rev. Dr. JACKSON preached. He took as his text a passage from the Second Epistle of St. John: "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God; he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath Father and Son." The sermon was heard by a large congregation, who listened attentively to the end.

An Insane Woman Attempts to Kill a Child.

From the Portland (Me.) Argus, Feb. 26.

Officer HASKELL was yesterday afternoon called to a house in the rear of Commercial-street, near the Portland, Saco and Portsmouth Railroad station, where an insane woman named CATHARINE REED had terrified the inmates. From the report of the officer we learn that Mrs. REED has at times during the last six months been afflicted with monomania, but during these spells of aberation of the mind, until yesterday she has appeared perfectly harmless. While laboring under this dreadful malady in this instance she seems to have imagined that a little child belonging to her sister was her own, and under an impulse, as fearful to contemplate as it was strange, she attempted the life of the little one. Seizing it, she was about to dash its brains out with an axe, when fortunately the woman's mother, perceiving her intent, was able to grasp her arm before the blow was given. The officer took her to the station, and last night she seemed quite calm. Dr. FRENCH was called in, and he pronounced her in a fit of temporary insanity.

The Right of Passengers on Railroads.

From the Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard, Feb. 26.

A commercial traveler connected with a house in New-York City called on us this morning and desired us to make the following statement of a transaction in which his rights as a passenger on a railway train were involved, and concerning the legality of which he intends to inquire. On the 23d of February he purchased a ticket to Springfield, Mass., at the depot of the New-York and New-Haven Railroad in New-York, and took passage on the 8 o'clock P. M. express train for New-Haven. Wishing to stop at Stamford, he informed the conductor of the fact, and received from him a ticket, or conductor's check, for that purpose. He remained at Stamford over night, and the next day took the cars again, expecting to stop at Norwalk. He tendered his tickets to the conductor, but was told that he could not stop at Norwalk on that ticket, but must give it up, or pay his fare. He paid his fare from Stamford to Norwalk under protest, retaining his tickets. He stopped at Norwalk, and again took the cars, getting on to Conductor FRANKLIN'S train on Friday. He tendered his tickets again, and stated that he would like to stop at Bridgeport. Conductor FRANKLIN said him that he could not stop at Bridgeport on that ticket, but must give it up, or be put off the train. He said his orders were imperative, and that he had no option but to obey. He refused to surrender his ticket unless allowed to stop at Bridgeport, and the conductor stopped the train at Westport, and he was ejected. While he was getting off, he states that his revolver, which he had in his pocket was taken from him, and that he lost a glove also. We hear of other cases where passengers over the same road have been required to pay their fare twice, on account of stopping over at different stations, and if will be well to have the rights of passengers and companies clearly defined in such cases. We understand that it is a rule of the road that no passenger with a through ticket can stop over more than once at a way station, and if such is the fact the action of the conductors in the case was according to orders, and therefore correct, as far as their duties extend. The legality of the rule will be an interesting point for passengers, and that is the question that should be settled for the benefit of all parties concerned. In the case above stated, the passenger says that he had always been accustomed to stop at any station he wished on this as well as other roads, and there was no notification of any change in the rules, till he was called upon to pay his fare from Stamford to Norwalk.

Reported Heavy Forgery on an Indianapolis Bank.

From the Indianapolis Sentinel, Feb. 25.

An item that has lain secretly smouldering in the breasts of a few of our citizens for nearly a month past came to our knowledge yesterday, and as it involves a swindling transaction of some magnitude, we see no good reason to allow it to smoulder. On the 6th of last August, a man who gave his name as E. L. DAVIS, purchased a draft at the First National Bank of Indianapolis made out for the sum of $32. Sometime during the last month the draft was returned to the bank here by a bank at Baltimore, Md., the amount called for on it having been raised to $9,300. The forgery in the erasure of the figures on the face and the written amount on the back, and substituting of the raised sum, was so neatly executed as at first to deceive the officers of the First National Bank, and it was only by a reference to their books, followed by a most rigid examination of the draft, that the forgery was made clearly apparent. The Baltimore bank advanced the full amount, $9,300, on the draft, and are out $9,268 by the transaction.
